

THE PLAYS OF WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.
...: VOLUME THE TWELFTH...

THE
P L A Y S
OF
WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.
VOLUME THE TWELFTH.

12

THE
P L A Y S
OF
WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE,
VOLUME THE TWELFTH.

CONTAINING
KING RICHARD II.
KING HENRY IV. PART I.

B A S I L:

Printed and sold by J. J. TOURNEISEN.
M.DCCC.I.

KING RICHARD II.*

Vol. XII.

A

* THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING RICHARD II.] But this history comprises little more than the two last years of this prince. The action of the drama begins with Bolingbroke's appealing the duke of Norfolk, on an accusation of high treason, which fell out in the year 1398; and it closes with the murder of King Richard at Pomfret-castle towards the end of the year 1400, or the beginning of the ensuing year. THEOBALD.

It is evident from a passage in Camden's Annals, that there was an old play on the subject of Richard the Second; but I know not in what language. Sir Gillie Merick, who was concerned in the hate-brained business of the Earl of Essex, and was hanged for it, with the ingenious Cuffe, in 1601, is accused, amongst other things, "quod exoletam tragicam de tragica abdicatione regis Ricardi Secundi in publico theatro coram conjuratis data pecuniâ agi curasset."

I have since met with a passage in my Lord Bacon, which proves this play to have been in English. It is in the assignments of Coffe and Merick, Vol. IV. p. 412. of Mallet's edition: "The afternoon before the rebellion, Merick, with a great company of others, that afterwards were all in the action, had procured to be played before them the play of deposing King Richard the Second; — when it was told him by one of the players, that the play was old, and they should have lost in playing it, because few would come to it, there was forty shillings extraordinary given to play, and so thereupon played it was."

It may be worth enquiry, whether some of the striking parts of the present play, which Mr. Pope thought of a different hand, might not be borrowed from the old one. Certainly however, the general tendency of it must have been very different; since, as Dr. Johnson observes, there are some expressions in this of Shakespeare, which strongly inculcate the doctrine of indisfeisable right.

FARMER.

Bacon elsewhere glances at the same transaction. "And for your comparison with Richard II. — I see you follow the example of them that brought him upon the stage, and into print in Queen Elizabeth's time." Works. Vol. IV. p. 278. The partisans of Essex had, therefore, procured the publication as well as the acting of this play. HOLT WHITE.

It is probable, I think, that the play which Sir Gillie Merick procured to be represented, bore the title of HENRY IV. and not of RICHARD II.

Camden calls it — "exoletam tragicam de tragica abdicatione regis Ricardi Secundi;" and (Lord Bacon in his account of The Effort of that which passed at the assignments of Merick and others) says, "That the afternoon before the rebellion, Merick had procured to be played before them, the play of deposing King Richard the Second." But in a more particular account of the proceeding against Merick, which is printed in the State Trials, Vol. VII. p. 60, the matter is stated thus: "The story of HENRY IV. being set forth in a play, and in that play there being set forth the killing of the king upon a stage; the Friday before, Sir Gilly Merrick and some others of the earl's train having an humour to see a play, they must needs have the play of HENRY IV. The players told them that was Hale; they should get nothing by playing that; but no play else would serve; and Sir Gilly Merrick gives forty shillings to Philips the player to play this, besides whatsoever he could get."

Augustine Philippi was one of the patentees of the Globe playhouse with Shakspeare in 1603; but the play here described was certainly not Shakspeare's HENRY IV. as that commenced above a year after the death of Richard. 1797. LUTT.

This play of Shakspeare was first entered at Stationers' Hall by Andrew Wise, Aug. 29, 1597. STANBEN.

It was written, I imagine, in the same year, MALONE.

PERSONS represented.

King Richard the Second.

Edmund of Langley, Duke of York; } uncles to the John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster; } King.

Henry, surnamed Bolingbroke, Duke of Hereford, son to John of Gaunt; afterwards King Henry IV.

Duke of Aumerle,  son to the Duke of York.*

Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.

Duke of Surrey.

Earl of Salisbury. Earl Berkley. ³

Busby,

Bagot, } creatures to King Richard.

Green,

Earl of Northumberland;

Henry Percy, his son.

Lord Ross. ⁴ Lord Willoughby. Lord Fitzwater.

Bishop of Carlisle. Abbot of Westminster.

Lord Marshal; and another lord.

Sir Pierce of Exton. Sir Stephen Scroop.

Captain of a band of Welchmen.

Queen to King Richard.

Duchess of Gloster.

Duchess of York.

Lady attending on the Queen.

Lords, Herald, Officers, Soldiers, two Gardeners, Keeper, Messenger, Groom, and other Attendants.

SCENE, dispersedly in England and Wales.

² Duke of Aumerle.] Aumerle, or Amale, is the French for what we now call Athens, which is a town in Normandy. The old historians generally use the French title. STEVENS.

³ Earl Berkley.] It ought to be Lord Berkley. There was no Earl Berkley till some ages after. STEVENS.

⁴ Lord Ross.] Now spelt Ross, one of the Duke of Rutland's titles. STEVENS.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING RICHARD II.

ACT I. SCENE I.

London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King RICHARD, attended; JOHN of GAUNT, and other nobles, with him.

K. RICH. Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd
Lancaster,
Hast thou, according to thy oath and band,^a Brought hither Henry Hereford thy bold son;
Here to make good the boisterous late appeal,
Which then our leisure would not let us hear,
Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

GAUNT. I have, my liege.

K. RICH. Tell me moreover, hast thou sounded him,
If he appeal the duke on ancient malice;

^a — thy oath and band, } When these public challenges were accepted, each combatant found a pledge for his appearance at the time and place appointed. So, in Spenser's Fairy Queen, B. IV.
C. iii. ll. 31:

"The day was set, that all might understand,

"And pledges pawn'd the same to keep aright."

The old copies read band instead of band. The former is right.
So, in The Comedy of Errors:

"My matter is arrested on a band." STEEVENS.

Band and Band were formerly synonymous. See note on the Comedy of Errors, Act. IV. sc. ii. MALONE.

Or worthily, as a good subject should,
On some known ground of treachery in him?

GAUNT. As near as I could sit him on that argument, —

On some apparent danger seen in him,
Aim'd at your highness, no inveterate malice.

K. RICH. I then call them to our presence; face to face,

And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear
The accuser, and the accused, freely speak: —

[Exeunt some Attendants,

High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,
In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Re-enter Attendants, with BOLINGBROKE and NORFOLK.

BOLING. Many years of happy days befall
My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

NOR. Each day still better other's happiness;
Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. RICH. We thank you both; yet one but flatters us,

As well appeareth by the cause you come;
Namely, to appeal each other of high treason. —
Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object

Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

BOLING. First, (heaven be the record to my speech!)

In the devotion of a subject's love,
Tendering the precious safety of my prince,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence. —
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,

And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
 My body shall make good upon this earth,
 Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.
 'Thou art a traitor, and a miscreant;
 'Too good to be so, and too bad to live;
 Since, the more fair and crystal is the sky,
 The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly.
 Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
 With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat;
 And wish, (so please my sovereign,) ere I move,
 What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn³ sword may prove.

NOR. Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal;
 'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
 The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
 Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain;
 The blood is hot, that must be cool'd for this.
 Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
 As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say:
 First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs me
 From giving reins and spurs to my free speech;
 Which else would pass, until it had return'd
 These terms of treason doubled down his throat.
 Setting aside his high blood's royalty,
 And let him be no kinsman to my liege,
 I do defy him, and I spit at him;
 Call him—a slanderous coward, and a villain;
 Which to maintain, I would allow him odds;
 And meet him, were I tied to run a-foot
 Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
 Or any other ground inhabitable⁴

³ — right-drawn —] Drawn in a right or just cause.

JOHNSON.

⁴ — inhabitable,] That is, not habitable, uninhabitable.

JOHNSON.

Where ever Englishman durst set his foot,
Mean time, let this defend my loyalty, —
By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie.

BOLING. Pale trembling toward, there I throw my gage.

Disclaiming here the kindred of the king;
And lay aside my high blood's royalty,
Which fear not reverence, makes thee to except:
If guilty dread hath left thee so much strength,
As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop;
By that, and all the rites of knighthood else,
Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.

NOW. I take it up; and, by that sword I swear,
Which gently lay'd my knighthood on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any fair degree,
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:
And, when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight!

K. RICH. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge?

It must be great, that can inherit us⁵
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

BOLING. Look, what I speak my life shall prove it true; —

Ben Jonson uses the word in the same sense in his Catiline:

"And pour'd on some inhabitable place." STEVENS.

So also Bractwalle, in his Survey of Histories, 1614: "Others, in imitation of some valiant knights, have frequented deserts and inhabited provinces." MALONE.

⁵ — that can inherit us, &c.] To inherit is no more than to possess, though such a use of the word may be peculiar to Shakespeare.
Again, in Romeo and Juliet, Act. I. sc. ii:

" — such delight

"Among fresh female buds shall you this night

"Inherit at my house." STEVENS.

See Vol. IV. p. 127. n. 6. MALONE.

That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles.

In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers;
The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments,⁶
Like a false traitor, and injurious villain.
Besides I say, and will in battle prove,—
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,—
That all the treasons, for these eighteen years
Comploted and contrived in this land, Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and spring.

Further I say,—and further will maintain
Upon his bad life, to make all this good,—
That he did plot the duke of Gloster's death;⁷
Suggest his soon-believing adversaries;⁸
And, consequently, like a traitor coward, Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood:

Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me, for justice, and rough chastisement;
And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. RICH. How high a pitch his resolution soars!—
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

⁶ —for lewd employments.] Lewd here signifies wicked. It is so used in many of our old statutes. MALONE.

Thus, in King Richard III.:

"But you must trouble him with lewd complaints."

STEEVENS.

⁷ —the duke of Gloster's death:] Thomas of Woodstock, the youngest son of Edward III., who was murdered at Calais, in 1397. MALONE.

⁸ Suggest his soon-believing adversaries:] i. e. prompt, set them on by injurious hints. Thus, in The Tempest:

"Flucy'll take suggestion, as a cat laps milk." STEEVENS.

NOR. O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood;
How God, and good men, hate so foul a liar.

K. RICH. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and ears:

Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
(As he is but my father's brother's son,)
Now by my scepter's awe¹ I make a vow,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unslipping firmness of my upright soul;
He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou;
Free speech, and fearless, I to thee allow.

NOR. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest!
Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais,
Disburs'd I duly to his highness' soldiers:
The other part reserv'd I by consent;
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt,
Upon remainder of a dear account,
Since last I went to France to fetch his queen:
Now swallow down that lie.—For Gloster's death,——

I slew him not; but, to my own disgrace,
Neglected my sworn duty in that case.—
For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe,
Once did I lay an ambush for your life,
A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul:
But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it; and exactly begg'd

¹ —this slander of his blood,] i. e. this reproach to his ancestry. STEEVENS.

² —my scepter's awe—] The reverence due to my scepter.

JOHNSON.

Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.
 This is my fault: As for the rest appeal'd,
 It issues from the rancour of a villain,
 A recreant and most degenerate traitor:
 Which in myself I boldly will defend;
 And interchangeably hurl down my gage
 Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
 To prove myself a loyal gentleman
 Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom:
 In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
 Your highness to assign our trial day.

K. RICH. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by me;

Let's purge this choler without letting blood:
 This we prescribe, though no physician;⁹
 Deep malice makes too deep incision:
 Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed;
 Our doctors say, this is no time to bleed.—
 Good uncle, let this end where it begun;
 We'll calm the duke of Norfolk, you your son,

⁹ This we prescribe, though no physician; &c.] I must make one remark in general on the rhymes throughout this whole play; they are so much inferior to the rest of the writing, that they appear to me of a different hand. What confirms this, is, that the context does every where exactly (and frequently much better) conned, without the inserted rhymes, except in a very few places; and just there too, the rhyming verses are of a much better taste than all the others, which rather strengthens my conjecture.

FORE,

¹¹ This observation of Mr. Pope's, (says Mr. Edwards,) happens to be very unluckily placed here, because the context, without the inserted rhymes, will not conned at all. Read this passage as it was at hand corrected by this rule, and we shall find, when the rhyming part of the dialogue is left out, King Richard begins with alluding them from the duel, and, in the very next sentence, appoints the time and place of their combat."

Mr. Edwards's censure is rather hasty; for in the note, to which it refers, it is allowed that some rhymes must be retained to make out the conception. STEEVENS.

GAUNT. To be a makepeace shall become my age—
Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage.

K. RICH. And, Norfolk, throw down his.

GAUNT. When, Harry?² when?
Obedience bids, I should not bid again.

K. RICH. Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is no boot.³

NOR. Myself I throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot:⁴

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
(Despite of death, that lives upon my grave.)⁵
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here;⁶
Pierc'd to the soul with slander's venom'd spear;⁷

² When, Harry?] This obsolete exclamation of impatience, is likewise found in Heywood's Silver Age, 1613:

³ By into Affrick; from the mountain there,

⁴ Chuse me two venomous serpents: thou shalt know them:

⁵ By their fell poison and their fiercer aspect,

⁶ When, Iris?

⁷ Iris. I am gone."

Again, in Last about you, 1600:

⁸ ——I'll cut off thy legs,

⁹ If thou delay thy duty. When, proud John?"

STEVENS.

¹⁰ ——no boot] That is, no advantage, no use, in delay or refusal. JOHNSON.

¹¹ ——my fair name, &c.] That is, my name that lives on my grave, in despite of death. This easy passage most of the editors seem to have mistaken. JOHNSON.

¹² ——and baffled here;] Baffled in this place means treated with the greatest ignominy imaginable. So, Holinshed, Vol. III. p. 827. and 1218, or annis 1513, and 1530, explains it: "Baffulling saye he, is a great disgrace among the Scots, and it is used when a man is openlie perjured, and then they make of him an image painted, reversed, with his heele upward, with his name, wondering, curing, and blowing out of him with horns." Spenser's Fairy Queen, B. V. c. iii. ll. 37; and B. VI. c. vii. ll. 27. has the word in the same signification. TOLLET.

The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood
Which breath'd this poison.

K. RICH. Rage must be withstood:
Give me his gage:—Lions make leopards tame,

NOR. Yea, but not change their spots:⁶ take but my shame,

And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord,
The purest treasure mortal times afford,
Is—spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay,
A jewel in a ten-times-barr'd-up chest
Is—a bold spirit in a loyal breast.

Mine honour is my life; both grow in one;
Take honour from me, and my life is done:
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try;
In that I live, and for that will I die.

K. RICH. Cousin, throw down your gage; do you begin.

BOLING. O, God defend my soul from such foul sin!

Shall I seem crestfallen in my father's fight?
Or with pale beggar-fear⁷ impeach my height
Before this outdard'd dastard? Ere my tongue
Shall wound mine honour with such feeble wrong,

⁶ The same expression occurs in Twelfth Night, sc. ult:

"Alas, poor fool! how have they baffled thee?"

Again, in K. Henry IV. Part I. Act I. sc. ii:

"—an I do not, call me villain, and baffle me."

Again, in The London Prodigal, 1605: "—chil be abaffelled up and down the town, for a mesfel," i. e. for a beggar, or rather a leper. STEEVENS.

⁷ —but not change their spots:] The old copies have—in spots. Corrected by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

⁸ —with pale beggar-fear—] This is the reading of one of the oldest quartos, and the folio. The quartos 1608 and 1615 read—beggar-face; i. e. (as Dr. Warburton observes) with a face of supplication. STEEVENS.

Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear
 The slavish motive⁴ of recanting fear;
 And spit it bleeding, in his high disgrace,
 Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's face.

[Exit GAUNT.]

K. RICH. We were not born to sue, but to command:

Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
 Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
 At Coventry, upon saint Lambert's day;
 There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
 The swelling difference of your settled hate;
 Since we cannot atone you,⁵ we shall see
 Justice design⁶ the victor's chivalry.—
 Marshal, command⁷ our officers at arms
 Be ready to direct these home-alarms. [Exeunt.]

⁴ The slavish motive—] Motiur, for instrument.

WARRINGTON.

Rather that which fear puts in motion. JOHNSON.

⁵ —atone you,] i. e. reconcile you. So, in Cymbeline:

"I was glad I did atone my countryman and you."

STEVENS.

⁶ Justice design—] Thus the old copies. Mr. Pope reads—"Justice decide," but without necessity. Designo, Lat. signifies to mark out, to point out: "Notat designatque oculis ad eundem unumquemque nostrum." Cicero in Catilinam. STEVENS.

To design in our author's time signified to mark out. See Minshew's Dict. in v. "To design or show by a token, Ital. Dimostrare. Lat. Designare." At the end of the article the reader is referred to the words "to mark, note, demonstrate or show."—The word is still used with this signification in Scotland.

MALONE.

⁷ Marshal, command, &c.] The old copies—Lord Marshall, but (as Mr. Risson observes) the metre requires the omission I have made. It is also justified by his Majesty's repeated address to the same officer, in scene iij. STRAVINS.

S C E N E II.

The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

*Enter GAUNT, and Duchefs of Glofter.

GAUNT. Alas! the part I had³ in Glofter's blood
Doth more follicit me, than your exclaims,
To fir againft the butchers of his life.
But fince correction lieth in thofe hands,
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who when he fees⁴ the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads.

DUCH. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper fpur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edward's feven fons, whereof thyfelf art one,
Were as feven phials of his fared blood,
Or feven fair branches, fpringing from one root:
Some of thofe feven are dried by nature's courfe,
Some of thofe branches by the deftinies cut:
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Glofter.—

* ——— duchefs of Glofter.] The Duchefs of Glofter was Eleanor Bohun, widow of Duke Thomas, fon of Edward III.

WALPOLE.

² ——— the part I had—] That is, my relation of confanguinity to Glofter. HAMMER.

³ ——— heaven;

Who when he fees—] The old copies erroneoufly read—
Who when they fee—

I have reformed the text by example of a fubfequent paffage, p. 16:

"—— heaven's fubftitute,

" His deputy, anointed in his fight," &c. STEEVENS.

One phial full of Edward's sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root,—
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt;
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe.
Ah, Gaunt! his blood was thine; that bed, that womb.

That mettle, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee,
Made him a man; and though thou liv'st, and breath'st.

Yet art thou slain in him : thou dost consent³
In some large measure to thy father's death,
In that thou seest thy wretched brother die,
Who 'was the model of thy father's life.

Call it not patience, Gaunt, it is despair:
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou show'st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee:

That which in mean men we entitle—patience,
Is pale, cold cowardice in noble breasts.

What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life,
The best way is—to 'venge my Gloster's death.

GAUNT. Heaven's is the quarrel ; for heaven's substitute.

His deputy anointed in his fight,

* Our final, &c.] Though all the old copies concur in the present regulation of the following lines, I would rather read—

One drop! fall of Edward's sacred blood

Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spill'd:

One flourishing branch of his most royal root

Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded.

Some of the old copies in this instance, as in many others, read redded, a mode of spelling practised by several of our ancient writers. After all, I believe the transposition to be needless.

STEEVENS.

³—then dost consent, &c.] i. e. assent. So, in St. Luke's Gospel, xlii. 31: "The same had not consisted to the counsel and deed of them," STEEVENS.

Hath caus'd his death: the which if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister.

DUCH. Where then, alas! may I complain myself?⁴

GAUNT. To heaven, the widow's champion and defence.

DUCH. Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt.⁵
Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold
Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight:
O, fit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,
That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast!
Or, if misfortune miss the first career,
Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foaming courser's back,
And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A caitiff recreant⁶ to my cousin Hereford!

⁴ — may I complain myself?] To complain is commonly a verb neuter, but it is here used as a verb active. Dryden employs the word in the same sense in his Fables:

"Gaufride, who couldst so well in rhyme complain

"The death of Richard with an arrow slain."

Complain myself (as Mr. M. Mason observes) is a literal translation of the French phrase, me plaindre. STEEVENS.

⁵ Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt.] The measure of this line being clearly defective, why may we not read? —

"Why then I will. New fare thee well, old Gaunt."

Or thus:

"Why then I will. Farewell old John of Gaunt."

There can be nothing ludicrous in a title by which the King has already addressed him. RITSON.

Sir T. Hanmer completes the measure, by repeating the word — farewell, at the end of the line. STEEVENS.

⁶ A caitiff recreant —] Caitiff originally signified a prisoner; next a slave, from the condition of riseners; then a scoundrel, from the qualities of a slave.

"ἄριστον τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀποκατενοῖται δόλιον ἥμαρ."

In this passage it partakes of all these significations. JOHNSON.

Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometimes brother's wife,
With her companion grief must end her life.

GAUNT. Sister, farewell: I must to Coventry:
As much good slay with thee, as go with me!

DUCH. Yet one word more;—Grief boundeth where it falls,

Not with the empty hollownefs, but weight:

I take my leave before I have begun;

For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done.

Commend me to my brother, Edmund York.

Lo, this is all:—Nay, yet depart not so;

Though this be all, do not so quickly go;

I shall remember more. Bid him—O, what?—

With all good speed at Plashey visit me.

Alack, and what shall good old York there see,

But empty lodgings, and unfurnish'd walls,⁶

Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones?

And what cheer there⁷ for welcome, but my groans?

This just sentiment is in Homer; but the learned commentator quoting, I suppose from memory, has compressed a couplet into a single line:

ἤμιν γὰρ τ' ἀπὸ τῆς ἀποδυνάμει συρροῦται Ζεὺς

Ἀνέστη, εὐτ' ἐν μὲν κατὰ δούλιον ἡμῶν ἐλθέειν.

Odys. Lib. XVII. v. 322. HOLT WHITE;

I do not believe that captif in our language ever signified a prisoner. I take it to be derived, not from captif, but from chetif, etc. poor, miserable. TYRWHITT.

⁶ — unfurnish'd walls,] In our ancient castles the naked stone walls were only covered with tapestry, or arras, hung upon tenter hooks, from which it was easily taken down on every removal of the family. See the preface to The Household Book of the Fifth Earl of Northumberland, begun in 1512. STEEVENS.

⁷ And what cheer there, &c.] I had followed the reading of the folio, [cheer] but now rather incline to that of the first quarto—And what cheer, there, &c. In the quarto of 1608, cheer was changed to hear, and the editor of the folio followed the latter copy. MALONE.

Therefore commend me; let him not come there,
 To seek out sorrow that dwells every where;
 Desolate, desolate, will I hence, and die;
 The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Gosford-Green near Coventry.

Lists set out, and a throne. Heralds, &c. attending.

*Enter the Lord Marshal,⁹ and AUMERLE.

MAR. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford
 arm'd?

AUM. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter in.

MAR. The duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,

Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

⁹ — let him not come there,

To seek out sorrow that dwells every where: } Perhaps the pointing might be returned without injury to the sense:

— let him not come there

To seek out sorrow: — that dwells every where.

WHALLY.

⁹ — Lord Marshal, } Shakspeare has here committed a slight mistake. The office of Lord Marshal was executed on this occasion by Thomas Holland, Duke of Surrey. Our author has inadvertently introduced that nobleman as a distinct person from the Marshal, in the present drama.

Mowbray Duke of Norfolk was Earl Marshal of England; but being himself one of the combatants, the Duke of Surrey officiated as Earl Marshal for the day. MALONE.

^{*} Aumerle.] Edward Duke of Aumerle, so created by his rousin german, King Richard II. in 1397. He was the eldest son of Edward of Langley Duke of York, fifth son of King Edward the Third, and was killed in 1415, at the battle of Agincourt. He officiated at the lists of Coventry, as High Constable of England.

MALONE.

AUM. Why then, the champions are prepar'd, and slay
For nothing but his majesty's approach.

Flourish of trumpets. Enter King RICHARD, who takes his seat on his throne; GAUNT, and several noblemen, who take their places. A trumpet is sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Then enter NORFOLK in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. RICH. Marshal, demand of yonder champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms:
Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him in the justice of his cause.

MAR. In God's name, and the king's, say who thou art,
And why thou com'st, thus knightly clad in arms:
Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel:
Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thy oath;
And so² defend thee heaven, and thy valour!

⁴NOR. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk;
Who hither come engaged by my oath,
(Which, heaven defend, a knight should violate!)
Both to defend my loyalty and truth,

² And so—] The old copies read—As so—.

STEVENS.

Corrected by Mr. Rowe. MALONE.

⁴ Norfolk.] Mr. Edwards, in his MS. notes, observes, from Holinshed, that the Duke of Hereford, appellant, entered the lists first; and this, indeed must have been the regular method of the combat; for the natural order of things requires, that the accuser or challenger should be at the place of appointment first.

STEVENS.

To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,⁵
 Against the duke of Hereford that appeals me;
 And, by the grace of God, and this mine arm,
 To prove him, in defending of myself,
 A traitor to my God, my king, and me:
 And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

[He takes his seat.]

Trumpet sounds. Enter BOLINGBROKE, in armour; preceded by a Herald.

K. RICH. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,⁶
 Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
 Thus plated in habiliments of war;
 And formally according to our law
 Depose him in the justice of his cause.

⁵ — my succeeding issue.] His is the reading of the first folio; other editions read—my issue. Mowbray's issue, was by this accusation, in danger of an anastrophe, and therefore he might come, among other reasons, for their sake: but the reading of the folio is more just and grammatical. JOHNSON.

The three oldest quartos read my, which Mr. M. Mason prefers, because, says he, Mowbray subjoins—

¹¹ To prove him, in defending of myself,

¹² A traitor to my God, my king, and me."

STEVENS.

— and my succeeding issue.] Thus the first quarto. The folio reads—his succeeding issue. The first quarto copy of this play, in 1597, being to general much more correct than the folio, and the quartos of 1608, and 1615, from the latter of which the folio appears to have been printed, I have preferred the elder reading. MALONE.

⁶ Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms.] Why not, as before?

¹¹ Marshal, demand of yonder knight in arms."

The player who varied the expression, was probably ignorant that he injured the metre. The insertion, however, of two little words would answer the same purpose.

¹² Marshal, go ask of yonder knight in arms." RITSON.

MAR. What is thy name? and wherefore com'st thou hither,

Before King Richard, in his royal lists?
Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight, to defend thee heaven!

BOLING. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Am I; who ready here do stand in arms,
To prove, by heaven's grace, and my body's valour,

In lists, on Thomas Mowbray duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, king Richard, and to me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

MAR. On pain of death, no person be so bold,
Or daring-hardy, as to touch the lists;
Except the marshal, and such officers
Appointed to direct these fair designs.

BOLING. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand,

And bow my knee before his majesty:
For Mowbray, and myself, are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then let us take a ceremonious leave,
And loving farewell, of our several friends.

MAR. The appellant in all duty greets your highness,

And craves to kiss your hand, and take his leave.

K. RICH. We will descend, and fold him in our arms.

Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be thy fortune in this royal fight!
Farewell, my blood; which it to-day thou shed,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

BOLING. O, let no noble eye profane a tear
 For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear :
 As confident, as is the falcon's flight
 Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight,——
 My loving lord, [To LORD MARSHAL.] I take my leave of you ;—

Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle ;—
 Not sick, although I have to do with death ;—
 But lusty, young, and cheerly drawing breath.——
 Lo, as at English feasts, so I regret
 The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet ;
 O thou, the earthly author of my blood,——

[To GAUNT.

Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
 Doth with a twofold vigour lift me up
 To reach at victory above my head,——
 Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers ;
 And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,
 That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,⁷
 And furbish⁸ new the name of John of Gaunt,
 Even in the lusty 'haviour of his son.

GAUNT. Heaven in thy good cause make thee prosperous !
 Be swift like lightning in the execution ;

⁷ ——waxen coat,] Waxen may mean soft, and consequently penetrable, or flexible. The bigandines or coats of mail, then in use, were composed of small pieces of steel quilted over one another, and yet so flexible as to accommodate the darts they form, to every motion of the body. Of these many are still to be seen in the Tower of London. STREVENs.

The object of Bolingbroke's request is, that the temper of his lance's point might as much exceed the mail of his adversary, as the iron of that mail was harder than wax. HENLEY.

⁸ And furbish.——] Thus the quartos, 1608 and 1615. The folio reads—furnish. Either word will do, as to furnish in the time of Shakspeare signified to dress. So, twice in As you like it :—
 “ furnish'd like a huntsman.”——“ furnish'd like a beggar.”

STREVENs.

And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy :
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

BOLING. Mine innocence,⁵ and faint George to thrive ! [He takes his seat.

NOR. [Rising.] However heaven, or fortune, cast
my lot,

There lives, or dies, true to king Richard's throne,
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman:
Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feast of battle⁶ with mine adversary.—
Most mighty liege,—and my companion peers,—
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years :
As gentle and as jocund, as to jest,⁷
Go I to fight ; Truth hath a quiet breast.

⁵ Mine innocence,] Old copies—innocence. Corrected by Mr. Steevens. MALONE.

⁶ This feast of battle—] " War is death's feast," is a proverbial saying. See Ray's Collection. STEEVENS.

⁷ As gentle and as jocund, as to jest,] Not so neither. We should read to jest ; i. e. to tilt or tourney, which was a kind of sport too. WARBURTON.

The sense would perhaps have been better if the author had written what his commentator substitutes ; but the rhyme, to which sense is too often enslaved, obliged Shakspeare to write jest, and obliges us to read it. JOHNSON.

The commentators forget that to jest sometimes signifies in old language to play a part in a mask. Thus, in Hieronymus :

" He promised us in honour of our guest,

" To grace our banquet with some pompous jest."

and accordingly a mask is performed. FARMER.

Dr. Farmer has well explained the force of this word. So, in the third Part of K. Henry VI :

" — as if the tragedy

" Were play'd in jest by counterfeited actors." TOLLET.

K. RICH. Farewell, my lord: securely I espy
Virtue with valour couched in thine eye. —
Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

[The King and the Lords return to their seats.]

MAR. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

BOLING. [Rising.] Strong as a tower in hope, I cry — amen.

MAR. Go bear this lance [To an Officer.] to Thomas duke of Norfolk.

1 HER. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby, Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself,
On pain to be found false and recreant,
To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,
A traitor to his God, his king, and him,
And dares him to set forward to the fight.

2 HER. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
On pain to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himself, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him, disloyal;
Courageously, and with a free desire,
Attending but the signal to begin.

MAR. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combatants. [A charge sounded.]
Stay, the king hath thrown his warder down.⁴

K. RICH. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,

⁴ — [hath thrown his warder down.] A warder appears to have been a kind of truncheon carried by the person who presided at these combats. So, in Daniel's Civil Wars, &c. B. I:

"When lo, the king, suddenly chang'd his mind,

"Casts down his warder to arrest them there."

STEVENS.

And both return back to their chairs again; —
 Withdraw with us: — and let the trumpets found,
 While we return these dukes what we decree. —

[A long flourish.

Draw near, [To the Combatants.
 And list, what with our council we have done.
 For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd
 With that dear blood which it hath fostered;⁵
 And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
 Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours'
 swords;

[⁶ And for we think the eagle-winged pride
 Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
 With rival-hating envy, set you on⁷
 To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle
 Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;]
 Which so rous'd up with boisterous untun'd drums,
 With harsh-resounding trumpets' dreadful bray,
 And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,
 Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,⁸

⁵ With that dear blood which it hath fostered; The quartos read —

With that dear blood which it hath been foster'd.

I believe the author wrote —

With that dear blood with which it hath been foster'd.

MALONE.

The quarto 1608 reads, as in the text. STEEVENS.

⁶ And for we think the eagle-winged pride, &c. These five verses are omitted in the other editions, and added from the first of 1598. POPE.

⁷ — set you on — The old copy reads — on you. Corrected by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

⁸ To wake our peace, —

Which so rous'd up —

Might — fright fair peace,] Thus the sentence stands in the common reading absurdly enough; which made the Oxford editor, instead of fright fair peace, read, be affrighted; as if these latter words could ever, possibly, have been blundered into the former

And make us wade even in our kindred's blood; —
 Therefore, we banish you our territories: —
 You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of death,
 Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields,
 Shall not regret our fair dominions,
 But tread the stranger paths of banishment.

by transcribers. But his business is to alter as his fancy leads him; not to reform errors as the text and rules of criticism direct. In a word then, the true original of the blunder was this: the editors, before Mr. Pope, had taken their editions from the folios, in which the text stood thus:

the dice aspect
Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbour's foots;
Which so sour'd up ————— fright fair peace.

This is sense. But Mr. Pope, who carefully examined the first printed plays in quarto (very much to the advantage of his edition) coming to this place, found five lines, in the first edition of this play printed in 1598, omitted in the first general collection of the poet's works; and, not enough attending to their agreement with the common text, put them into their place. Whereas, in truth, the five lines were omitted by Shakspeare himself, as not agreeing to the rest of the context; which, on revise, he thought fit to alter. On this account I have put them into hooks, not as spurious, but as rejected on the author's revise; and, indeed, with great judgment; for,

To wake our peace, which is our country's cradle
Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep,

as pretty as it is in the image, is absurd in the sense: for peace awake is still peace, as well as when asleep. The difference is, that peace asleep gives one the notion of a happy people sunk in sloth and luxury, which is not the idea the speaker would raise, and from which state the sonnet it was awaked the better.

WARDURTON.

To this note, written with such an appearance of taste and judgement, I am afraid every reader will not subscribe. It is true, that peace awake is still peace; as well as when asleep; but peace awakened by the tumult of these jarring nobles, and peace indulging in profound tranquillity, convey images sufficiently opposed to each other for the poet's purpose. To wake peace is to introduce discord. Peace asleep, is peace exerting its natural influence, from which it would be frightened by the clamours of war.

STEEVENS.

BOLING. Your will be done: This must my comfort be, —

That sun, that warms you here, shall shine on me;
And those his golden beams, to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

K. RICH. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,

Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The fly-flow hours² shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile; —
The hopeless word of — never to return
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

NOR. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege,
And all unlook'd for from your highness' mouth:
A dearer merit, not so deep a maim
As to be cast forth in the common air,
Have I deserved³ at your highness' hand,

¹ The fly-flow hours —] The old copies read — The fly-flow hours. Mr. Pope made the change; whether it was necessary or not, let the poetical reader determine. STEEVENS.

The latter word appears to me more intelligible: — "the thievish minutes as they pass." MALONE.

² A dear merit, not so deep a maim —

Have I deserved —] To deserve a merit is a phrase of which I know not any example. I wish some copy would exhibit:

A dearer merit, and not so deep a maim.

To deserve a merit or reward, is regular and easy. JOHNSON.

As Shakspeare uses merit in this place, in the sense of reward, he frequently uses the word merit, which properly signifies reward, to express merit. So, in Timon of Athens, Lucullus says —

" — no merit but he repays

" Seven fold above itself."

And in the Third Part of Henry VI. Prince Edward says —

" We are the sons of brave Plantagenet,

" Each one already blazing by our merits."

And again, in the same play, King Henry says —

" That's not my fear, my merit hath got me fame."

M. MASON.

The language I have learn'd these forty years,
 My native English, now I must forego:
 And now my tongue's use is to me no more,
 Than an unstringed viol, or a harp;
 Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up,
 Or being open, put into his hands
 That knows no touch to tune the harmony.
 Within my mouth you have engao'd my tongue,
 Doubly portcullis'd, with my teeth, and lips;
 And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance
 Is made my gaoler to attend on me.
 I am too old to fawn upon a nurse,
 Too far in years to be a pupil now;
 What is thy sentence then, but speechless death,
 Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?

K. RICH. It hoots thee not to be compassionate;²
 After our sentence plaining comes too late.

NOR. Then thus I turn me from my country's light,
 To dwell in solemn shades of endless night.

[Retiring.

K. RICH. Return again, and take an oath with thee.

Lay on our royal sword your banish'd hands;
 Swear by the duty that you owe to heaven,
 (Our part therein we banish with yourselves,) ³
 To keep the oath that we administer: —

² ——— compassionate] for plaintive. WARBURTON.

³ [Our part, &c.] It is a question much debated amongst the writers of the law of nations, whether a banished man may be still tied in his allegiance to the state which sent him into exile. Tully and Lord Chancellor Clarendon declare for the affirmative; Hobbes and Puffendorf hold the negative. Our author, by this line, seems to be of the same opinion. WARBURTON.

You never shall (so help you truth and heaven!)
 Embrace each other's love in banishment;
 Nor ever look upon each other's face;
 Nor never write, regret, nor reconcile
 This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate;
 Nor never by advised³ purpose meet,
 To plot, contrive, or complot any ill,
 'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.

BOLING. I swear.

NOR. And I, to keep all this.

BOLING. Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy;—⁴
 By this time, had the king permitted us,
 One of our souls had wander'd in the air,

³ — advised—] i. e. concerted, deliberated, So, in The Merchant of Venice:

"— with more advised watch." STEEVENS.

⁴ Norfolk, so far, &c.] I do not clearly see what is the sense of this abrupt line; but suppose the meaning to be this. Hereford immediately after his oath of perpetual enmity addresses Norfolk, and, fearing some misconception, turns to the king and says—so far as to mine enemy—that is, I should say nothing to him but what enemies may say to each other.

Reviewing this passage, I rather think it should be understood thus. Norfolk, so far I have addressed myself to thee as to mine enemy, I now utter my last words with kindness and tenderness, Confess thy trespass. JOHNSON.

— so far, as to my enemy;] i. e. he only wishes him to fare like his enemy, and he disdains to say fare well as Anneville does in the next scene. TOLLET.

The first folio reads fare; the second faire. Holingbroke only uses the phrase by way of caution, lest Mowbray should think he was about to address him as a friend. Norfolk, says he, so far as a man may speak to his enemy, &c. RITSON.

Surely fare was a misprint for faire, the old spelling of the word now placed in the text. — Perhaps the author intended that Hereford in speaking this line should show some courtesy to Mowbray;— and the meaning may be, So much civility as an enemy has a right to, I am willing to offer to thee MAHON.

Sir T. Haumer's marginal direction is — In consultation. STEEVENS.

Banish'd this frail sepulcher of our flesh,³
 As now our flesh is banish'd from this land:
 Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly the realm;
 Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
 The clogging burden of a guilty soul.

NOR. No, Bolingbroke; if ever I were traitor,
 My name be blotted from the book of life,
 And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence!
 But what thou art, heaven, thou, and I do know;
 And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue. —
 Farewell, my liege: — Now no way can I stray;
 Save back to England, all the world's my way.⁴

[Exit.

K. RICH. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
 I see thy griev'd heart: thy sad aspect
 Hath from the number of his banish'd years
 Pluck'd four away; — Six frozen winters spent, Return [To BOLING.] with welcome home from banishment.

BOLING. How long a time lies in one little word!

³ — this frail sepulcher of our flesh,] So afterwards:

" — thou King Richard's tomb,

" And not King Richard. — "

And Milton, in Samson Agonistes:

" Myself my sepulchre, a moving grave." HENLEY.

⁴ — all the world's my way.] Perhaps Milton had this in his mind when he wrote these lines:

" The world was all before them, where to choose " Their place of rest, and Providence their guide."

JOHNSON.

The duke of Norfolk after his banishment went to Ventre, where, says Hulinshed, " for thought and melancholy he deceased."

MALONE.

I should point the passage thus:

— Now no way can I stray.

Save back to England: — all the world's my way.

There's no way for me to go wrong, except back to England.

M. MASON.

Four lagging winters, and four wanton springs,
End in a word; Such is the breath of kings.

GAUNT. I thank my liege, that, in regard of me,
He shortens four years of my son's exile:
But little vantage shall I reap thereby;
For, ere the six years, that he hath to spend,
Can change their moons, and bring their times about,

My oil-dried lamp, and time-bewasted light,
Shall be extinct with age, and endless night;
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And blindfold death not let me see my son.

K. RICH. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.

GAUNT. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give:

Shorten my days thou canst with fullen sorrow,
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow:^{*}
Thou canst help time to furrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage;
Thy word is current with him for my death;
But, dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

K. RICH. Thy son is banish'd upon good advice,^{*}
Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict gave;^{*}
Why at our justice seem'st thou then to lower?

GAUNT. Things sweet to taste, prove in digestion four.

^{*} And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow:] It is matter of very melancholy consideration, that all human advantages confer more power of doing evil than good. JOHNSON.

^{*} — upon good advice,] Upon great consideration.

MALONE.

So, in King Henry VI. Part II:

"But with advice and silent secrecy." STEEVENS.

^{*} — a party-verdict gave:] i. e. you had yourself a part or share in the verdict that I pronounced. MALONE.

You urg'd me as a judge ; but I had rather,
 You would have bid me argue like a father:—
 O, had it been a stranger,² not my child,
 To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:
 A partial slander³ fought I to avoid,
 And in the sentence my own life destroy'd.
 Alas, I look'd, when some of you should say;
 I was too strict, to make mine own away;
 But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue,
 Against my will, to do myself this wrong.

K. RICH. Cousin, farewell:—and, uncle, bid him
 so;

Six years we banish him, and he shall go.

[Flourish. Excunt K. RICHARD. and Train.]

AUM. Cousin, farewell: what presence must not know,

From where you do remain, let paper show.

MAR. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride,
 As far as land will let me, by your side.

GAUNT. O, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words,

That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends?

BOLING. I have too few to take my leave of you,
 When the tongue's office should be prodigal
 To breathe the abundant dolour of the heart.

GAUNT. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time,

¹ O, had it been a stranger,] This couplet is wanting in the folio.
 STEEVENS.

² A partial slander.—] That is, the reproach of partiality. This is a just picture of the struggle between principle and affection.

JOHNSON.

This couplet, which is wanting in the folio edition, has been arbitrarily placed by some of the modern editors at the conclusion of Gaunt's speech. In the three oldest quartos it follows the fifth line of it. In the fourth quarto, which seems copied from the folio, the passage is omitted. STEEVENS.

BOLING. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.

GAUNT. What is six winters ; they are quickly gone.

BOLING. To men in joy ; but grief makes one hour ten.

GAUNT. Call it a travel that thou tak'st for pleasure.

BOLING. My heart will sigh, when I miscall it so,

Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage.

GAUNT. The sullen passage of thy weary steps Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set The precious jewel of thy home-return.

BOLING. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make⁴ Will but remember me, what a deal of world I wander from the jewels that I love.

Must I not serve a long apprenticeship To foreign passages ; and in the end, Having my freedom, boast of nothing else, But that I was a journeyman to grief?⁵

⁴ Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make.—] This, and the six verses which follow, I have ventured to supply from the old quarto. The allusion, it is true, to an apprenticeship, and becoming a journeyman, is not in the sublime taste ; not, as Horace has expressed it, "spiritu tragicum satius" however, as there is no doubt of the passage being genuine, the lines are not so despicable as to deserve being quite lost. THEOBALD.

⁵ — journeyman to grief!] I am afraid our author in this place designed a very poor quibble, as journey signifies both travel and a day's work. However, he is not to be censured for what he himself rejected. JOHNSON.

The quarto, in which these lines are found, is said in its title-page to have been corrected by the author ; and the play is indeed more accurately printed than most of the other single copies. There is now, however, no certain method of knowing by whom the rejection was made. STEEVENS.

GAUNT. All places that the eye of heaven visits,⁶
 Are to a wise man ports and happy havens :
 Teach thy necessity to reason thus ;
 There is no virtue like necessity
 Think not, the king did banish thee ;⁷
 But thou the king :⁸ Woe doth the heavier sit,
 Where it perceives it is but faintly borne,
 Go, say—I lent thee forth to purchase honour,
 And not—the king exil'd thee : or suppose,
 Devouring pestilence hangs in our air,
 And thou art flying to a fresher clime.

⁶ All places that the eye of heaven visits, &c.] The fourteen verses that follow are found in the first edition. POPE.

I am inclined to believe that what Mr. Theobald and Mr. Pope have restored were expunged in the revision by the author : If these lines are omitted, the sense is more coherent. Nothing is more frequent among dramatic writers, than to shorten their dialogues for the stage. JOHNSON.

⁷ —Did banish thee ;] Read :

Therefore, think not, the king did banish thee. RITSON.

⁸ Think not, the king did banish thee :

But thou the king:] The same thought occurs in Coriolanus :

" I banish you." M. MASON.

All places that the eye of heaven visits,

Are to a wise man ports and happy havens :—

Think not the king did banish thee ;

But thou the king:] Shakspeare, when he wrote the passage before us, probably remembered that part of Lyly's Euphues, 1580, in which Euphues exhorts Botanio to take his exile patiently. Among other arguments he observes, that " Nature hath given to man a country no more than she hath a house, or lands, or livings. Socrates would neither call himself an Athenian, neither a Grecian, but a citizen of the world. Plato would never account him banished, that had the sunne, ayre, water, and earth, that he had before ; where he felt the winter's blast and the summer's blaze ; where the same sunne and the same moone shined : whereby he noted that every place was a country to a wise man, and all parts a palace to a quiet mind.—When it was said in Diogenes' teeth, that the Siocones had banished him Pontus, yea, said he, I them of Diogenes." MALONE.

Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou com'st:
Suppose the singing birds, musicians;
The grass whereon thou tread'st, the presence flew'd;²

The flowers, fair ladies; and thy steps, no more
Than a delightful measure,³ or a dance:
For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light.

BOLING. O, who can hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?⁴

² ————[the presence flew'd] Shakspeare has other allusions to the ancient practice of strewing rushes over the floor of the prætor chamber. HANLEY.

So, in Cymbeline:

"——— Tarquin thus

"Did softly press the rushes, ere he waken'd

"The chastity he wounded:——" STREAVENS.

See Hentzner's account of the presence chamber, in the palace at Greenwich, 1598? Itinerary. p. 135. MALONE.

³ Than a delightful measure,] A measure was a formal court dance. So, in K. Richard III.

"Out dreadful marches to delightful measures."

STREAVENS.

⁴ O, who can hold a fire in his hand, &c.] Fire is here, as in many other places, used as a dissyllable. MALONE.

It has been remarked, that there is a passage resembling this in Tully's Fifth Book of Tusculan Questions. Speaking of Epicurus, he says:—"Sed uol se dicit recordatione acquiescere præteritarum voluptatum: ut si quis æstuans, cum vix calor non facile patitur, recordari velit se aliquando in Asiphetæ ostio gelidis fluminibus circumtasum fuisse. Non enim video, quomodo sedare possint mala præsentia præteritæ voluptates." Tæt Tusculan Questions of Cicero had been translated early enough for Shakspeare to have seen them. STREAVENS.

Shakspeare, however, I believe, was thinking on the words of Livy in the page from which an extract has been already made: "I speak this to this end, that though thy exile seem grievous to thee, yet guiding thy selfe with the rules of philosophy, it should be more tolerable: he that is cold, doth not cover himselfe with

Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
 By bare imagination of a feast?
 Or wallow naked in December snow,
 By thinking on fantastick summer's heat?
 O, no! the apprehension of the good,
 Gives but the greater feeling to the worse;
 Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more.
 Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore.

GAUNT. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way:

Had I thy youth, and cause, I would not stay.

BOLING. Then, England's ground, farewell; sweet foil, adieu;

My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet!

Where-e'er I wander, boast of this I can.—

Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman.³

[Exeunt.

case but with clothes; he that is washed in the rains, drieth himselfe by the fire, not by his fancy; and thou which art banished," &c. MALONE.

³ ——— yet a trueborn Englishman.] Here the first act ought to end, that between the first and second acts there may be time for John of Gaunt to accompany his son, return, and fall sick. Then the first scene of the second act begins with a natural conversation, interrupted by a message from John of Gaunt, by which the king is called to visit him, which visit is paid in the following scene.
 As the play is now divided, more time passes between the two last scenes of the first act, than between the first act and the second.

JOHNSON.

S C E N E IV.

The same. A Room in the King's Castle.

Enter King RICHARD, BAGOT, and GREEN; AUMERLE following.

K. RICH. We did observe.—Cousin Aumerle,
How far brought you high Hereford on his way?

AUM. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,
But to the next highway, and there I left him.

K. RICH. And, say, what store of parting tears were shed?

AUM. 'Faith, none by me: ⁴ except the northeast wind,

Which then blew bitterly against our faces,
Awak'd the sleeping rheum; and so, by chance,
Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. RICH. What said our cousin, when you parted with him?

AUM. Farewell:

And for my heart disdained that my tongue
Should so profane the word, that taught me craft
To counterfeit oppression of such grief,

⁴ ——— now by me: } The old copies read—for me. With the other modern editors I have here adopted an emendation made by the editor of the second folio; but without necessity. For me, may mean, on my part. Thus we say, "For me, I am content," &c.
where these words have the same signification as here.

MALONE.

If we read—for me, the expression will be equivocal, and seem as if it meant no tears were shed on my account. So, in the preceding scene:

"O, let no noble eye profane a tear

"For me," &c. SKEEVENS.

That words seem'd buried in my sorrow's grave.
Marry, would the word farewell have lengthen'd hours,

And added years to his short banishment,
He should have had a volume of farewells;
But, since it would not, he had none of me.

K. RICH. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our kinsman come to see his friends,
Ourself, and Bully, Bagot here, and Green.⁴
Observ'd his courtship to the common people:—
How he did seem to dive into their hearts,
With humble and familiar courtesy;
What reverence he did throw away on slaves;
 wooing poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles,
And patient underbearing of his fortune,
As 'twere, to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oysterwench;
A brace of draymen bid—God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee.⁵
With—Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends;
As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects' next degree in hope.⁶

GREEN. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts,
Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland;
Expedient⁷ manage must be made, my liege;

⁴ — Bagot here, and Green.] The old copies read—here Bagot. The transposition was made in a quarto of no value, printed in 1634. MALONE.

⁵ — the tribute of his supple knee.] To illustrate this phrase, it should be remembered that courtesying, (the act of reverence now confined to women) was anciently practised by men. STEVENS.

⁶ And he our subjects' next degree in hope.] Spes altera Romæ, Virg. MALONE.

⁷ Expedient—] i. e. expeditions. So, in King John:

"His marches are expedient to this town." STEVENS.

Ere further leisure yield them further means,
For their advantage, and your highness' lots.

K. RICH. We will ourselves in person to this war.
And, for our coffers⁶—with too great a court,
And liberal largesse,—are grown somewhat light,
We are enforced to farm our royal realm;
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand: If that come short,
Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;
Whereunto, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,
And send them after to supply our wants;
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter BUSHY.

K. RICH. Bushy, what news?

BUSHY. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my
lord;
Suddenly taken; and hath sent post-haste,
To entreat your majesty to visit him.

K. RICH. Where lies he?

BUSHY. At Ely-house.

K. RICH. Now put it, heaven, in his physician's mind,
To help him to his grave immediately!
The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.
Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him:
Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late!
[Exeunt.]

⁶ ——— for our coffers——] i. e. because. So, in Othello;
"—— Haply, for I am black;——" STEEVENS.

KING RICHARD II.

41

ACT II. SCENE I.

London. A Room in Ely-house.

GAUNT. on a Couch; the Duke of YORK,¹ and Others standing by him.

GAUNT. Will the king come? that I may breathe my last
In wholesome counsel to his unstay'd youth.

YORK. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;

For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.

GAUNT. O, but, they say, the tongues of dying men

Enforce attention, like deep harmony:

Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain;

For they breathe truth, that breathe their words in pain.

* He, that no more must say, is listen'd more

Than they whom youth and ease have taught to close;

More are men's ends mark'd, than their lives before:

The setting sun, and musick at the close,²

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last;

Writ in remembrance, more than things long past:

¹ — the Duke of York,] was Edmund, son of Edward III.

WALFOLT.

² — at the close,] This I suppose to be a musical term. So,
in Lingua, 1607:

"I dare engage my ears, the close will jar."

STEEVENS.

Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear.

YORK. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds,

As, praises of his state: then, there are found
Lascivious metres;^a to whose venom sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen:

Report of fashions in proud Italy;^b

Whose manners still our tardy apish nation
Limps after, in base imitation.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
(So it be new, there's no respect how vile,)

That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?

Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,

Where will doth munity with wit's regard.^c

Direct not him, whose way himself will choose;^d

'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thou lose.

GAUNT. Methinks, I am a prophet new in-spir'd;

^a Lascivious metres;] The old copies have—metres; but I believe we should read metres, for verses. Thus the folio spells the word metre in the first part of King Henry IV:

" — one of these same metre ballad-monsters."

Venom sound agrees well with lascivious ditties, but not so commodiously with one who meets another; in which sense the word appears to have been generally received. STEEVENS.

^b Report of fashions in proud Italy;] Our author, who gives to all nations the customs of England, and to all ages the manners of his own, has charged the times of Richard with a folly not perhaps known then, but very frequent in Shakspeare's time, and much lamented by the wisest and best of our ancestors.

^c Where will doth munity with wit's regard.] Where the will rebels against the notices of the understanding. JOHNSON.

^d — whose way himself will choose;] Do not attempt to guide him, who, whatever thou shalt say, will take his own course.

JOHNSON.

And thus, expiring, do foretell of him :—

His rash ⁴ fierce blaze of riot cannot last ;

For violent fires soon burn out themselves :

Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short ;

He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes ;

With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder :

Light vanity, insatiate cormorant,

Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.

This royal throne of kings, this scepter'd isle,

This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,

This other Eden, demi-paradise ;

This fortress, built by nature for herself,

Against infection, ⁵ and the hand of war ;

This happy breed of men, this little world ;

This precious stone set in the silver sea,

Which serves it in the office of a wall,

Or as a moat defensive to a house,

Against the envy of less happier lands ; ⁶

This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,

This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,

⁴ ——— rash—] That is, hasty, violent. JOHNSON.

So, in K. Henry IV. Part I :

" Like acanthus, or rash gunpowder." MALONE.

⁵ Against infection,] I once suspected that for infection we might read invasion ; but the copies all agree, and I suppose Shakspeare meant to say, that illaunders are focused by their situation both from war and pestilence. JOHNSON.

In Allot's England's Parnassus, 1600, this passage is quoted—
" Against intefion," &c. perhaps the word might be infection, if such a word was in use. FARMER.

⁶ ——— less happier lands ;] So read all the editions, except Sir T. Haumer's, which has less happy. I believe, Shakspeare, from the habit of saying more happier, according to the custom of his time, inadvertently writ less happier. JOHNSON.

Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth,^r
 Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
 (For Christian service, and true chivalry,)
 As is the sepulcher in stubborn Jewry,
 Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's son:
 This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land,
 Dear for her reputation through the world,
 Is now leas'd out (I die pronouncing it,)
 Like to a tenement, or pelting farm:^s
 England, bound in with the triumphant sea,
 Whose rocky shore beats back the envions siege
 Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,

^r Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth,] The first edition in quarto, 1598, reads:

Fear'd by their breed, and famous for their birth.

The quarto, in 1615:

Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth.

The first folio, though printed from the second quarto, reads as the first. The particles in this author seem often to have been printed by chance. Perhaps the passage, which appears a little disordered, may be regulated thus:

— royal kings,

Fear'd for their breed, and famous for their birth,

For Christian service, and true chivalry;

Renowned for their deeds as far from home

As is the sepulchre ——— JOHNSON.

The first folio could not have been printed from the second quarto, on account of many variations as well as omissions. The quarto 1608 has the same reading with that immediately preceding it. STEEVENS.

Fear'd by their breed,] i. e. by means of their breed.

MALONE.

^s This land ———

Is now leas'd out (I die pronouncing it,]

Like to a tenement, or pelting farm:]

"In this and yeare of King Richard (says Fabian) the common fame saunce, that the kinge had letten to farm the realme unto Sir William Scrope, earle of Wiltshire, and then treasurer of England, to Syr John Bushey, Sir John Bagot, and Sir Henry Grene, knightes." MALONE.

With inky blots,² and rotten parchment bonds;³
 That England, that was wont to conquer others,
 Hath made a shameful conquest of itself:
 O, would the scandal vanish with my life,
 How happy then were my ensuing death!

*Enter King RICHARD, and Queen;*⁴ AUMERLE,⁴ BUSHY, GREEN, BAGOT, ROSS,⁵ and WIL-LOUGHBY.⁶

YORK. The king is come: deal mildly with his youth;

² With inky blots,] I suspect that our author wrote—inky bolts. How can bolts bind in any thing? and do not bolts correspond better with heads? Inky bolts are missive restrictions. So, in The Honourable Man's Fortune, by Beaumont and Fletcher, Act IV. sc. 3:

"——managing itself

"to gins of parchment." STREVENSON.

³ —— rotten parchment bonds] Alluding to the great sums raised by loans and other exactions, in this reign, upon the English subjects. GREY.

Gaunt does not allude, as Grey supposes, to any loans or exactions extorted by Richard, but to the circumstances of his having actually farmed out his royal realm, as he himself styles it. In the last scene of the fifth act he says:

"And, for our coffers are grown somewhat light,

"We are enforced to farm our royal realm."

And afterwards appears that the person who farmed the realm was the Earl of Wiltshire, one of his own favourites.

⁴ —— Queen] Shakspeare, as Mr. Walpole suggests to me, has deviated from historical truth in the introduction of Richard's queen as a woman in the present piece; for Anne, his first wife, was dead before the play commences, and Isabella, his second wife, was a child at the time of his death. MALONE.

⁵ —— Ross] was Edward, eldest son of Edmund Duke of York, whom he succeeded to the title. He was killed at Agincourt. WALPOLE.

⁶ —— Ross] was William Lord Ross, (and so should be printed,) of Hamlake, afterwards Lord Treasurer to Henry IV.

WALPOLE.

For young hot colts, being rag'd, do rage the more.*

QUEEN. How fares our noble uncle, Lancaster?

K. RICH. What comfort, man? How is't with aged Gaunt?

GAUNT. O, how that name befits my composition!

Old Gaunt, indeed; and gaunt in being old:

Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;

And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt?

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;

Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:

The pleasure, that some fathers feed upon,

Is my strict fast, I mean—my children's looks;

And, therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt:

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,

Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

K. RICH. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

GAUNT. No, misery makes sport to mock itself:
Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me,

I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee.

K. RICH. Should dying men flatter with those that live?

GAUNT. No, no; men living flatter those that die.

K. RICH. Thou, now a dying, say'st—thou flatter'st me.

GAUNT. Oh! no; thou die'st, though I the sicker be.

* — Willoughby.] was William Lord Willoughby of Eresby, who afterwards married Joan, widow of Edmund Duke of York.

WALPOLE.

* For young hot colts, being rag'd, do rage the more.] Read — — being rein'd, do rage the more." RITSON.

K. RICH. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.

GAUNT. How, He that made me, knows I see thee ill;

Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill.*

Thy death-bed is no lesser than thy land,

Wherein thou liest in reputation sick;

And thou, too careless patient as thou art,

Commit'st thy appointed body to the cure

Of those physicians that first wounded thee:

A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown,

Whose compass is no bigger than thy head;

And yet, incaged in so small a verge,

The waste is no whit lesser than thy land.

O, had thy grandfire, with a prophet's eye,

Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,

From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame:

Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd,

Which art possess'd now to depose thyself.

Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,

It were a shame, to let this land by lease:

But, for thy world, enjoying but land,

Is it not more than shame, to shame it so?

Landlord of England art thou now, not king:

Thy state of law is bondslave to the law;†

* Ill in myself to see, and in the seeing ill.] I cannot help supposing that the idle words—to see, which destroy the measure, should be omitted. STEVENS.

† Thy state of law is bondslave to the law;] State of law, i. e. legal sovereignty. But the Oxford editor alters it to state o'er law, i. e. absolute sovereignty. A doctrine, which, if ever our poet learnt at all, he learnt not in the reign when this play was written, Queen Elizabeth's, but in the reign after it, King James's. By bondslave to the law, the poet means his being enslaved to his favorite subjects. WARBURTON.

This sentiment, whatever it be, is obscurely expressed. I un-demand it differently from the learned commentator, being perhaps not quite so zealous for Shakspeare's political reputation. The reasoning of Gaunt, I think, is this: By sitting the royalties to farm thou hast reduced thyself to a state below sovereignty, thou art now no longer king but landlord of England, subject to the same restraint and limitations as other landlords: by making thy condition a rule of law, a condition upon which the common rules of law can operate, thou art become a bondslave to the law; thou hast made thyself amenable to laws from which thou wert originally exempt.

And thou——

K. RICH. —— a lunatick lean-witted fool.*

Whether this explanation be true or no, it is plain that Dr. Warburton's explanation of bondslave to the law, is not true.

JOHNSON.

Warburton's explanation of this passage is too absurd to require refutation; and his political observation is equally ill-founded. The doctrine of absolute sovereignty might as well have been learned in the reign of Elizabeth, as in that of her successor. She was, in fact, as absolute as he wished to be.

Johnson's explanation is in general just; but I think that the words, of law, must mean, by law, or according to law, as we say, of course, and of right, instead of by right, or by course.—Gaunt's reasoning is this:—“Having let your kingdom by lease, you are no longer the king of England, but the landlord only; and your state is by law, subject to the law.” M. MALONE.

Mr. Heath explains the words state of law somewhat differently: “Thy royal estate, which is established by the law, is now in virtue of thy having leased it out, subjected,” &c. MALONE.

* Gaunt. And thou——

K. Rich. —— a lunatick lean-witted fool,] In the disposition of these lines I have followed the folio, in giving the word thou to the king; but the regulation of the first quarto, 1597, is perhaps preferable, being more in our poet's manner:

Gaunt. And thou——

K. Rich. —— a lunatick lean-witted fool,—

And thou a mere cypher in thy own kingdom, Gaunt was going to say. Richard interrupts him, and takes the word thou in a different sense, applying it to Gaunt, instead of himself. Of this kind of retort there are various instances in these plays.

The folio repeats the word And:

Gaunt. And——

K. Rich. And thou, &c. MALONE.

Presuming on an ague's privilege,
 Dar'st with thy frozen admonition
 Make pale our cheek; chasing the royal blood,
 With fury, from his native residence.
 Now by my seat's right royal majesty,
 Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son,
 This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head,
 Should run thy head from thy unreverend shoulders.

GAUNT. O, spare me not, my brother Edward's son,

For that I was his father Edward's son;
 That blood already, like the pelican,
 Hast thou tapp'd out, and drunkenly carous'd:
 My brother Gloster, plain well-meaning soul,
 (Whom fair befall in heaven 'mongst happy souls!)
 May be a precedent and witness good,
 'T hat thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood:
 Join with the present sickness that I have;
 And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
 To crop at once a too-long wither'd flower.²

— lean-witted —] Dr. Farmer observes to me that the same expression occurs in the 106th Psalm:

" — and sent leannefs withal into their soul."

STEEVENS.

² And thy unkindness be like crooked age,

To crop at once a too-long wither'd flower.] Thus stand these lines in all the copies, but I think there is an error. Why should Gaunt, already old, call on any thing like age to end him? How can age be said to crop at once? How is the idea of crookedness connected with that of cropping? I suppose the poet dictated thus:

And thy unkindness be time's crooked edge

To crop at once —

That is, let thy unkindness be time's scythe to crop.

Edge was easily misheard by the ear with age, and one mistake soon admitted made way for another. JOHNSON.

Shakspeare, I believe, took this idea from the figure of Time, who was represented as carrying a scythe as well as a scythe. A scythe was anciently called a crook, and sometimes, as in the fol-

Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee!—
 These words hereafter thy tormentors be!—
 Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:—
 Love they⁹ to live, that love and honour have.

[Exit, borne out by his Attendants.]

K. RICH. And let them die, that age and fullness have;

For both hast thou, and both become the grave.

YORK. 'Beseech your majesty,⁹ impute his words
 To wayward sickness and age in him:

lowing instances, crook'd may mean armed with a crook. So, in Kendall's Epigrams, 1577:

"The regall king and crook'd clowne
 "All one alike death driveth downe."

Again, in the 100th Sonnet of Shakspeare:

"Give my love, fame, faster than time wastes life,
 "So thou prevent'st his scythe and crook'd knife."

Again, in the 119th:

"Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
 "Within his leading sickle's compass come."

It may be mentioned, however, that crook'd is an epithet bestowed on age in the tragedy of Locrine, 1595:

"Now yield to death o'erlaid by crook'd age."

Locrine has been attributed to Shakspeare; and in this passage quoted from it, no allusion to a scythe can be supposed. Our poet's expressions are sometimes confused and abusive. STEEVENS.

Again, in A Fleashe upon Fancie, by N. B. [Nicholas Breton,] 1577:

"Who, when that he awhile hath bin in fancies schoole,
 "Doth learne in his old crook'd age to play the doting foole."

MALONE.

Shakspeare had probably two different but kindred ideas in his mind; the bend of age, and the sickle of time, which he confounded together. M. MASON.

⁹ Less they—] That is, let them less. JOHNSON.

⁹ Beseech your majesty,] The old copies redundantly read—
 I do beseech, &c.

Mr. Kiston would regulate the passage differently (and perhaps rightly) by omitting the words—in him:

He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry duke of Hereford, were he here.

K. RICH. Right; you say true: as Hereford's love;
so his:

As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is,

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.³

NORTH. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.

K. RICH. What says he now?⁴

NORTH. Nay, nothing; all is said:
His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

YORK. Be York the next that must be bankrupt
so!

Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.

K. RICH. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth
he;

His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be:⁵
So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars:
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns;
Which live like venom, where no venom else,⁶
But only they, hath privilege to live.

I do beseech your majesty, impute

His words to wayward sickness and age. STEPHENS.

³ ——— Northumberland.] was Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland. WALSÖLE.

⁴ What says he now?] I have supplied the adverb—now, (which is wanting in the old copy) to complete the measure.

STEPHENS.

⁵ ——— our pilgrimage must be:] That is, our pilgrimage is yet to come. M^r. MASON.

⁶ ——— where no venom else,] This alludes to a tradition that

And, for these great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance, we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables,
Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.

YORK. How long shall I be patient? Ah, how long
Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
Not Gloster's death, nor Hereford's banishment,
Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,

Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke
About his marriage,⁶ nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.—
I am the last of noble Edward's sons,
Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first;
In war was never lion rag'd more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman:
His face thou hast, for even so look'd he,
Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;⁷
But when he frown'd, it was against the French,
And not against his friends: his noble hand

St. Patrick freed the kingdom of Ireland from venomous reptiles of every kind. So, in Decker's Honest Whore, P. II. 1630:

" ——— that Irish Judas,

" Boed in a country where no venom prospers,

" But in his blood."

Again, in Præterea Træa, 1635:

" As Irish earth doth poison poisonous beasts." STEVENS.

⁶ Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke

About his marriage.] When the duke of Hereford, after his banishment, went into France, he was honourably entertained at that court, and would have obtained in marriage the only daughter of the duke of Berry, uncle to the French king, had not Richard prevented the match. STEVENS.

⁷ Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;] i. e. when he was of thy age. MALONE.

Did win what he did spend, and spent not that
Which his triumphant father's hand won:
His hands were guilty of no kindred's blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.
O, Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.

K. RICH. Why, uncle, what's the matter?

YORK.

O, my liege,

Pardon me, if you please; if not, I pleas'd
Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.
Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands,
The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?
Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
'Take Hereford's rights away, and take from time
His charters, and his customary rights;
Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;
Be not thyself, for how art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession?
Now, afore God (God forbid, I say true!)
If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
Call in the letters patents that he hath
By his attornies-general to sue
His livery, and deny his offer'd homage,*
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honour and allegiance cannot think.

K. RICH. Think what you will; we seize into our hands
His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

* ——— deny his offer'd homage,] That is, refuse to admit that homage, by which he is to hold his lands. JOHNSON.

YORK. I'll not be by, the while: My liege, farewell;

What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;
But by bad courses may be understood,
That their events can never fall out good. [Exit.]

K. RICH. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire straight;

Bid him repair to us to Ely-house,
To see this business: To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow;
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England.
For he is jull, and always lov'd us well.—
Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is short. [Flourish.]

[Exeunt King, Queen, BUSHY, AUMERLE, GREEN, and BAGOT.]

NORTH. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead.

ROSS. And living too; for now his son is duke.

WILLO. Barely in title, not in revenue.

NORTH. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

ROSS. My heart is great; but it must break with silence.

Ere't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue.

NORTH. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne'er speak more,

That speaks thy words again, to do thee harm!

WILLO. Tends that thou'dst speak, to the duke of Hereford?

If it be so, out with it boldly, man;

Quick is mine ear, to hear of good towards him.

ROSS. No good at all, that I can do for him;
Unless you call it good, to pity him,
Bereft and gelded of his patrimony.

NORTH. Now, afore heaven, 'tis shame, such wrongs are borne,

In him a royal prince, and many more
Of noble blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute
Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.

ROSS. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,

And lost their hearts:³ the nobles hath he fin'd
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.

WILLO. And daily new exactions are devis'd;
As—blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what, o'God's name, doth become of this?

NORTH. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd he hath not,

But basely yielded upon compromise
That which his ancestors achiev'd with blows:
More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.

ROSS. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.

WILLO. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man.

NORTH. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over him.

ROSS. He hath not money for these Irish wars.
His burdenous taxations notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.

³ And lost their hearts] The old copies erroneously and un-metrically read—

⁴ And quite lost their hearts:—

The compositor's eye had caught the adverb—quite, from the following line. STEEVENS.

NORTH. His noble kinsman:—Most degenerate king!

But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,¹
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm:
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not,² but securely perish.³

ROSS. We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoids is the danger³ now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck.

NORTH. Not so; even through the hollow eyes of death,

I spy life peering; but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.

WILLO. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

ROSS. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts; therefore, be bold.

NORTH. Then thus:—I have from Port le Blanc, a bay

In Britany, receiv'd intelligence,
That Harry Hereford, Reignold lord Cobham,

¹ — we hear this fearful tempest sing.] So, in The Tempest:

" — another storm brewing; I hear it sing in the wind.".

STEEVENS.

² And yet we strike not.] To strike the sails, is, to contract them when there is too much wind. JOHNSON.

³ — but securely perish.] We perish by too great confidence in our security. The word is used in the same sense in The Merry Wives of Windsor: "Though Foul be a secure fool," &c.

MALONE.

Again, in Troilus and Cressida, Act IV. sc. v:

" 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done."

See Dr. Farmer's note on this passage. STEEVENS.

³ And unavoids is the danger —] Unavoided is, I believe, here used for unavoidable. MALONE.

[The son of Richard Earl of Arundel,]
That late broke from the duke of Exeter,⁴

⁴ [The son of Richard earl of Arundel,]

[That late broke from the duke of Exeter.] I suspect that some of these lines are transposed, as well as that the poet has made a blunder in his enumeration of persons. No copy that I have seen, will authorize me to make an alteration, though according to Holinshed, whom Shakspeare followed in great measure, more than one is necessary.

All the persons enumerated in Holinshed's account of those who embark'd with Bolingbroke, are here mentioned with great exactness, except "Thomas Arundell, sonne and heire to the late earle of Arundell, beheaded at the Tower-hill." See Holinshed. And yet this nobleman, who appears to have been thus omitted by the poet, is the person to whom alone that circumstance relates of having broke from the duke of Exeter, and to whom alone, of all mentioned in the list, the archbishop was related, he being uncle to the young lord, though Shakspeare by mistake calls him his brother. See Holinshed, p. 496.

From these circumstances here taken notice of, which are applicable only to this line in particular, and from the improbability that Shakspeare would omit so principal a personage in his history's list, I think it can scarce be doubted but that a line is lost in which the name of this Thomas Arundel had originally a place.

Mr. Ritson, with some probability, supposes Shakspeare could not have neglected so fair an opportunity of availing himself of a rough ready-made verse which offers itself in Holinshed:

[The son and heir to the late earl of Arundel,] STEEVENS.

For the insertion of the line included within crotchets, I am answerable; it not being found in the old copies.

The passages in Holinshed relative to this matter run thus: "About the same time the Earl of Arundell's sonne, named Thomas, which was kept in the Duke of Exeter's house, escaped out of the realme, by meanes of one William Scot," &c. "Duke Henry,—chiefly through the earnest perswasion of Thomas Arundell, late Archbiskoppe of Canteburie, (who, as before you have heard, had been removed from his sea, and banished the realme by King Richardes means,) got him downe to Brittain:—and when all his provision was made ready, he tooke the sea, together with the said Archbiskop of Canteburie, and his nephew Thomas Arundell, sonne and heyre to the late Earle of Arundell, beheaded on Tower-hill. There were also with him Reginalde Lord Cobham, Sir Thomas Erpingham," &c.

His brother, archbishop late of Canterbury,⁵
 Sir Thomas Erpingham, sir John Ramston,
 Sir John Norbery, sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quoint,——

All these, well furnish'd by the duke of Bretagne,
 With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
 Are making hither with all due expedience,
 And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
 Perhaps, they had ere this; but that they stay
 The first departing of the king for Ireland,
 If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
 Imp out⁶ our drooping country's broken wing,

There cannot, therefore, I think, be the smallest doubt, that a line was omitted in the copy of 1597, by the negligence of the transcriber or compositor, in which not only Thomas Arundel, but his father, was mentioned; for his in a subsequent line (His brother) must refer to the old Earl of Arundel.

Rather than leave a lacuna, I have inserted such words as render the passage intelligible. In A^d V. fr. ii. of the play before us, a line of a rhyming couplet was passed over by the printer of the first folio:

" Ill may'st thou thrive, if thou grant any grace."

It has been recovered from the quarto. So also, in K. Henry VI. Part II. the first of the following lines was omitted, as is proved by the old play on which that piece is founded, and (as in the present instance) by the line which followed the omitted line:

" [Sis. Jove sometimes went disguis'd, and why not I?]

" Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt be."

In Coriolanus, A^d II. fr. ult. a line was in like manner omitted, and it has very properly been supplied.

The christian name of Sir Thomas Ramston is changed to John, and the two following persons are improperly described as knights in all the copies. These perhaps were likewise mistakes of the press, but are scarcely worth correcting. MALONE.

—— archbishop late of Canterbury,] Thomas Arundel, Archbishop of Canterbury, brother to the Earl of Arundel who was beheaded in this reign, had been banished by the parliament, and was afterwards deprived by the Pope of his see, at the request of the King; whence he is here called, late of Canterbury.

STEVENS.

⁶ Imp out —] As this expression frequently occurs in our author,

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,
 Wipe off the dust that hides our scepter's gilt,⁷
 And make high majesty look like itself,
 Away, with me, in post to Ravensburg;
 But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
 Stay, and be secret, and myself will go.

ROSS. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them that fear.

WILLO. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. [Exeunt.

it may not be amiss to explain the original meaning of it. When the wing-feathers of a hawk were dropped, or forced out by any accident, it was usual to supply as many as were deficient. This operation was called, to imp a hawk.

So, in The Devil's Charter, 1607:

" His plumes only imp the muse's wings."

Again, in Alhamezar, 1615:

" — when we desire

" Time's haste, he seems to lose a match with lobsters;

" And when we with him stay, he imps his wings

" With feathers plum'd with thought."

Turberville has a whole chapter on The Way and Manner how to ympe a Hawk's Feather, how-soever it be broken or bronfed.

STEEVENS.

⁷ — gilt,] i. e. gilding, superficial display of gold. So, in Timon of Athens:

" When thou wast in thy gift and thy perfume," &c.

STEEVENS.

S C E N E II.

The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen, BUSHY, and BAGOT.

BUSHY. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:
You promis'd, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness,⁷
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

QUEEN. To please the king, I did; to please myself,

I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard: Yet, again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing trembles: at something it grieves,⁸
More than with parting from my lord the king.

⁷ — life-harming heaviness,] Thus the quarto, 1597. The quartos 1608, and 1615 — half-harming; the folio — self-harming.

⁸ With nothing trembles: at something it grieves,] The following line requires that this should be read just the contrary way:

With something trembles, yet at nothing grieves.

STEVENS.
WARBURTON.

All the old editions read:

— my inward soul

With nothing trembles: at something it grieves.

The reading, which Dr. Warburton corrects, is itself an innovation. His conjectures give indeed a better sense than that of any copy, but copies must not be needlessly forsaken. JOHNSON.

I suppose it is the unborn sorrow which she calls nothing, because it is not yet brought into existence. STEVENS.

Warburton does not appear to have understood this passage, nor Johnson neither. Through the whole of this scene, till the arrival

BUSHY. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,

Which show like grief itself, but are not so :
 For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
 Divides one thing entire to many objects ;
 Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon,
 Show nothing but confusion ; ey'd awry,
 Distinguish form : ² so your sweet majesty, of Green, the Queen is describing to Bushy, a certain unaccountable dependency of mind, and a foreboding apprehension which she felt of some unforeseen calamity. She says, "that her inward soul trembles without any apparent cause, and grieves at something more than the King's departure, though she knows not what." He endeavours to persuade her that it is merely the consequence of her sorrow for the King's absence. She says it may be so, but her soul tells her otherwise. He then tells her it is only conceit ; but she is not satisfied with that way of accounting for it, as she says that conceit is still derived from some fore-father grief, but what she feels was begot by nothing ; that is, had no preceding cause. Conceit is here used in the same sense that it is in Hamlet, when the King says that Ophelia's madness was occasioned by "conceit upon her father." M. MASON.

² Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon,
 Show nothing but confusion ; ey'd awry,

Distinguish form : } This is a fine similitude, and the thing meant is this. Amongst mathematical recreations, there is one in optics, in which a figure is drawn, wherein all the rules of perspective are inverted : so that, if held in the same position with those pictures which are drawn according to the rules of perspective, it can present nothing but confusion : and to be seen in form, and under a regular appearance, it must be looked upon from a contrary station ; or, as Shakspeare says, ey'd awry. WARBURTON.

Dr. Pior's History of Staffordshire, p. 391, explains this perspective, or odd kind of "pictures upon an indented board, which, if beheld directly, you only perceive a confused piece of work ; but, if obliquely, you see the intended person's picture ;" which he, was told, was made thus : "The board being indented, [or furrowed with a plough-plane,] the print or painting was cut into parallel pieces equal to the depth and number of the indentures on the board, and they were palled on the flax that like the eye holding it obliquely, so that the edges of the parallel pieces of the print or painting exactly joining on the edges of the indentures, the work was done." TOLLET.

Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Find shapes of grief, more than himself, to wail;
Which, look'd on as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice-gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not; more's not seen:

The following short poem would almost persuade one that the words rightly and awry [perhaps originally written — eright and awry] had exchanged places in the text of our author.

Lines prefixed to "Melancholic Humour, in Verses of Diverse Nature, set down by Nick. Briston, Gent. 1600."

In Authorem.

- "Thou that wouldst hide the habit of true passion,
"And see a minde aw'd in perfect strainet;
"Not wearing moodet, as gallants doe a fashion
"In these pide times, only to shewe their braiet;
"Looke here on Bieton's work, the master pilot,
"Where such perfectioon to the life doe rise:
"If they seeme awy, to such as looke asquint,
"The fault's not in the object, but their eyes.
"For, at one conning with a laterall viewe
"Unto a cunning piece-wrought perspicion,
"Want faculcie to make a censie true:
"So with this author's teadell will it thrive:
"Which, being eyed directly, I divine,
"His prooffe their praise will meete, as in this line."

Ben Jonson. STEEVENS.

So, in Hentani, 1538, Royal Palace, Whitehall. "Edwardi VI. Angliæ regis ethices, primo intuitu monstruosum quid repæsculant, sed si quis ———— ethicem rectè intueatur, tum vera deprehenditur."

FARMER.

The perspicions here mentioned, were not pictures, but round chryslal glasses, the convex surface of which was cut into facets, like those of the rose-diamond; the concave less uniformly smooth, these chryslals — which were sometimes mounted on tortoise-shell boxes, and sometimes fixed into ivory cases — if placed as here represented, would exhibit the different appearances described by the poet.

The word shadow is here used, in opposition to substance, for reflected images, and not as the dark forms of bodies, occasioned by their interception of the light that falls upon them. HANLEY.

Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary.

QUEEN. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: Howe'er it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad,
As,—though, in thinking, on no thought I think,²—
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

BUSHY. 'Tis nothing but conceit,³ my gracious lady.

QUEEN. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd

From some fore-father grief; mine is not so;
For nothing hath begot my something grief;
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:⁴

² As,—though, in thinking, on no thought I think,] Old copy—on thinking; but we should read—As though in thinking; that is though, musing, I have no distinct idea of calamity. The involuntary and unaccountable depression of the mind, which every one has sometime felt, is here very forcibly described. JOHNSON.

³ 'Tis nothing but conceit,] Conceit is here, as in K. Henry VIII. and many other places, used for a fanciful conception. MALONE.

⁴ For nothing hath begot my something grief;

Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:] With these lines I know not well what can be done. The queen's reasoning as it now stands, is this: my trouble is not conceit, for conceit is still deriv'd from some antecedent cause, some fore-father grief; but with me the case is, that either my real grief hath no real cause, or some real cause has produced a fancied grief. That is, my grief is not conceit, because it either has not a cause like conceit, or it has a cause like conceit. This can hardly stand. Let us try again, and read thus:

For nothing hath begot my something grief;

Not something hath the nothing that I grieve:

That is, my grief is not conceit: conceit is an imaginary uneasiness from some past occurrence. But, on the contrary, here is real grief without a real cause; not a real cause with a fanciful sorrow. This, I think, must be the meaning, harsh at the best, yet better than confusion or absurdity. JOHNSON.

'Tis in reversion that I do possess;
But what it is, that is not yet known; ⁵ what
I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe, I wol.

Enter GREEN.

GREEN. God save your majesty! — and well met, gentlemen: —
I hope, the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland.
QUEEN. Why hop'st thou so? 'tis better hope,
he is;
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope;
Then wherefore dost thou hope, he is not shipp'd?
GREEN. That he, our hope, might have retir'd his power, ⁶

⁵ 'Tis in reversion that I do possess;

But what it is, that is not yet known; &c.] I am about to propose an interpretation which many will think harsh, and which I do not offer for certain. To possess a man, in Shakspeare, is to inform him fully, to make him comprehend. To be possessed, is to be fully informed. Of this sense the examples are numerous:

"I have possess'd him my most day can be but short."

Measure for Measure.

"—— Is he yet possess'd

"What from you would?" Merchant of Venice.

I therefore imagine the queen says thus:

'Tis in reversion — — that I do possess: — —

The event is yet in fatality — — that I know with full conviction — but what it is, that is not yet known. In any other interpretation she must say that she possesses what is not yet come, which, though it may be allowed to be poetical and figurative language, is yet, I think, less natural than my explanation. MALONE.

As the grief the Queen felt, was for some event which had not yet come to pass, or at least yet come to her knowledge, she expresses this by saying that the grief which she then actually possessed, was still in reversion, as she had no right to feel the grief until the event should happen which was an occasion it.

M. MASON.

⁶ — might have retir'd his power,] Might have drawn it back.
A French scold. JOHNSON.

And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
 Who strongly hath set footing in this land :
 The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
 And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd
 At Ravenspurg.

QUEEN. Now God in heaven forbid !

GREEN. O, madam, 'tis too true : and that is worse, —

The lord Northumberland, his young son Henry
 Percy,
 The lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby,
 With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.

BUSHY. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland,
 And all the rest of the revolting faction
 Traitors ?

GREEN. We have: whereon the earl of Worcester
 Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
 And all the household servants fled with him
 To Bolingbroke.

QUEEN. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woe,
 And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir :

So, in The Rape of Lucrece :

" Each one, by him colord'd, retires his ward." MATONE.
 ? — my sorrow's dismal heir :] The author seems to have used heir in an improper sense, an heir being one that inherits by succession, is here put for one that succeeds, though he succeeds but in order of time, not in order of descent. JOHNSON.

Johnson has mistaken the meaning of this passage also. The Queen does not in any way allude to Bolingbroke's succession to the crown, an event, of which she could at that time have had no idea.
 She had said before, that " some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb, was coming towards her." She talks afterwards of her unknown griefs " being begotten ;" she calls Green " the midwife of her woe ;" and then means to say, in the same metaphorical jargon, that the arrival of Bolingbroke was the dismal offspring that her foreboding sorrow was big of ; which she expresses by calling him her

VOL. XII.

F

Now hath my foul brought forth her prodigy;
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.'

BUSHY. Despair not, madam.

QUEEN. Who shall hinder me?
I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope; he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter YORK,

GREEN. Here comes the duke of York.

QUEEN. With signs of war about his aged neck;
O, full of careful business are his looks!—
Uncle,

For heaven's sake, speak comfortable words.

YORK. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts:
Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives, but crosses, care, and grief.
Your husband he is gone to save far off,
Whilst others come to make him lose at home:
Here am I left to underprop his land;
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself:—
Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

"sorrow's dismal heir," and explains more fully and intelligibly in the following line:

Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy. M. MASON.

?—thou art the midwife to my woe,—

And I a gasping new-deliver'd mother,

Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.] So, in Pericles

"I am great with woe, and shall deliver weeping."

MALONE.

* Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts:] This line is found in the three eldest quartos, but is wanting in the folio. STANBRO.

Enter a Servant.

SERV. My lord, your son was gone before I came.

YORK. He was?—Why, so!—go all which way it will!—

The nobles they are fled, the commons cold,²
And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side. — Sirrah,

Get thee to Plashy,³ to my sister Gloucester;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound: —
Hold, take my ring.

SERV. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:

To-day, as I came by, I called there; —
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.

YORK. What is it, knave?

SERV. An hour before I came, the duchess died.

YORK. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes
Comes rushing on this woeful land at once!
I know not what to do: — I would to God,
(So my untruth⁴ had not provok'd him to it,)
The king had cut off my head with my brother's,⁵ —

² The nobles they are fled, the commons cold,] The old copies, injuriously to the metre, read —

The nobles they are fled, the commons they are cold.

STEEVENS.

³ Get thee to Plashy,] The lordship of Plashy, was a town of the duchess of Gloucester's in Essex. See Hall's Chronicle, p. 15.

THEOBALD.

⁴ — untruth —] That is, disloyalty, treachery. JOHNSON.

⁵ The king had cut off my head with my brother's.] None of York's brothers had his head cut off, either by the King or any one else. The duke of Gloucester, to whose death he probably alludes, was secretly murdered at Calais, being smothered between two beds.

RITSON.

What, are there posts despatch'd for Ireland? ⁵—
 How shall we do for money for these wars? —
 Come, sister — cousin, I would say: ⁶ pray, pardon
 me. —

Go, fellow, [To the Servant.] get thee home, provide some carts,
 And bring away the armour that is there. —

[Exit Servant.

Gentlemen, will you go muster men? if I know
 How, or which way, to order these affairs,
 Thus thrust disorderly into my hands,
 Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen; —
 The one's my sovereign, whom both my oath
 And duty bids defend; the other again,
 Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd; ⁷
 Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
 Well, somewhat we must do. — Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you: — Go, muster up your men,
 And meet me presently at Berkley-castle.
 I should to Plashy too; —
 But time will not permit: — All is uneven,
 And every thing is left at six and seven.

[Exit York and Queen.

BUSHY. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,
 But none returns. For us to levy power,
 Proportionable to the enemy,
 Is all impossible.

⁵ What, are there posts despatch'd for Ireland? Thus the folio.
 The quartos — two posts — and — no posts. STEVENS.

⁶ Come, sister, — cousin, I would say:] This is one of Shakspeare's touches of nature. York is talking to the queen his cousin, but the recent death of his sister is uppermost in his mind. STEVENS.

⁷ Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd;] Sh T. Hanmer has completed this defective line, by reading —

My kinsman is, one whom the king hath wrong'd.

STEVENS.

GREEN. Besides, our nearness to the king in love,
Is near the hate of those love not the king.

BAGOT. And that's the wavering commons: for their love

Lies in their purses; and who so empties them,
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

BUSHY. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.

BAGOT. If judgement lie in them, then so do we,
Because we ever have been near the king.

GREEN. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol castle;

The earl of Wiltshire is already there.

BUSHY. Thither will I with you: for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us;

Except, like curs, to tear us all to pieces. —

Will you go along with us?

BAGOT. No; I'll to Ireland to his majesty.

Farewell: if heart's presages be not vain,

We three here part, that ne'er shall meet again.

BUSHY. That's as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

GREEN. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes
Is — numb'ring sands, and drinking oceans dry;
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.

BUSHY. Farewell at once; for once, for all, and ever.

GREEN. Well, me may meet again.

BAGOT. I fear me, never.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

The Wilds in Gloucestershire.Enter BOLINGBROKE and NORTHUMBERLAND, with Forces.

BOLING. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?

NORTH. Believe me, noble lord,

I am a stranger here in Gloucestershire.

These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome:
And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.But, I bethink me, what a weary way
From Ravenspurg to Gotswold, will be found
In Rofs and Willoughby, wanting your company;
Which, I protest, hath very much beguil'd
The tediousness and process of my travel:⁵
But theirs is sweeten'd with the hope to have
The present benefit which I possess:
And hope to joy,⁶ is little less in joy,
Than hope enjoy'd: by this the weary lords
Shall make their way seem short! as mine hath done
By fight of what I have, your noble company.⁵ — wanting your company:Which, I protest, hath very much beguil'dThe tediousness and process of my travel:] So, in K. Lear, 1605:

"Thy pleasant company will make the way seem short."

MALONE.

⁶ And hope to joy,] To joy is, I believe, here used as a verb.
So, in the second act of King Henry IV: "Poor fellow never joy'd since the price of oats rose." Again, in King Henry VI, P. II:

"Was ever king that joy'd an earthly throne —"

The word is again used with the same signification in the play before us. MALONE.

BOLING. Of much less value is my company,
Than your good words. But who comes here?

Enter HARRY PERCY.

NORTH. It is my son, young Harry Percy,
Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.—
Harry, how fares your uncle?

PERCY. I had thought, my lord, to have learn'd his health of you.

NORTH. Why, is he not with the queen?

PERCY. No, my good lord; he hath forsook the court,
Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd
The household of the king.

NORTH. What was his reason?
He was not so resolv'd, when last we spake together.

PERCY. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor.

But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurg,
To offer service to the duke of Hereford! .
And sent me o'er by Berkley, to discover
What power the duke of York had levied there;
Then with direction to repair to Ravenspurg.

NORTH. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford, boy?

PERCY. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot,
Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him.

NORTH. Then learn to know him now; this is the duke.

PERCY. My gracious lord, I tender you my service,

Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young;
Which elder days shall ripen, and confirm
To more approved service and desert.

BOLING. I thank thee, gently Percy; and be sure,
I count myself in nothing else so happy,
As in a soul rememb'ring my good friends;
And, as my fortune ripens with thy love,
It shall be still thy true love's recompense:
My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals
it.

NORTH. How far is it to Berkley? And what stir
Keeps good old York there, with his men of war?

PERCY. There stands the castle, by yon tuft of trees,
Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard;
And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Seymour;
None else of name, and noble estimate.

Enter ROSS and WILLOUGHBY.

NORTH. Here come the lords of Ross and Willoughby,
Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.

BOLING. Welcome, my lords: I wot, your love pursues
A banish'd traitor; all my treasury
Is yet but unselt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompense.

ROSS. Your presence makes us rich, most noble
lord.

WILLO. And far surmounts our labour to attain
it.

BOLING. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor ;

Which, till my infant fortune comes to years,
Stands for my bounty. But who comes here ?

Enter BERKLEY.

NORTH. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess.

BERK. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you.⁶

BOLING. My lord, my answer is—to Lancaster ;⁷
And I am come to seek that name in England :
And I must find that title in your tongue,
Before I make reply to aught you say.

BERK. Mistake me not, my lord ; 'tis not my meaning.

To raze one title of your honour out :⁸—
To you, my lord, I come, (what lord you will,)
From the most glorious regent of this land,⁹
The duke of York ; to know, what pricks you on

⁶ My lord of Hereford, my message is to you.] I suspect that our author designed this for a speech rendered abrupt by the impatience of Bolingbroke's reply ; and therefore wrote :

My lord of Hereford, my message is—

The words to you, only (save to destroy the metre. STEVENS.

⁷ —my answer is—to Lancaster :] Your message, you say, is to my lord of Hereford. My answer is, it is not to him ; it is to the Duke of Lancaster. MALONE.

⁸ To raze one title of your honour out :] "How the names of them which for capital crimes against majesty were erased out of the publicke records, tables, and registres, or foshidden to be borne by their posteritie, when their memorie was dammed, I could shew at large." Cumden's Remains, p. 136, edit. 1605. MALONE.

⁹ From the most glorious regent of this land,] Thus the first quarto, 1597. The word regent was accidentally omitted in the quarto, 1598, which was followed by all the subsequent copies.

MALONE.

To take advantage of the absent time,*
And fright our native peace with self-born arms,

Enter YORK, attended.

BOLING. I shall not need transport my words by you;
Here comes his grace in person,—My noble uncle! [Kneels.

YORK. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,
Whose duty is deceivable and false.

BOLING. My gracious uncle!—

YORK. Tut, tut!

Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:³
I am no traitor's uncle; and that word—grace,
In an ungracious mouth, is but profane.
Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs
Dar'd once to touch a dust of England's ground?
But then more why;⁴—Why have they dar'd to march

* —the absent time,] i. e. time of the king's absence.

JOHNSON.

³ Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:] In Romeo and Juliet we have the same kind of phraseology:

"Thank me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds."
Agao, in Microcynicon, Six snarling Satires, &c. 16mo. 1599:

"Hower me no howers; howers break no square."

MALONE.

The reading of the folio is preferable:

Tut, tut! grace me no grace, nor uncle me. RITSON.

⁴ But then more why:] This seems to be wrong. We might read:

But more than this; why, &c. TYRWHITT.

But then more why;] But, to add more questions. This is the reading of the first quarto, 1597, which in the second, and all the subsequent copies, was corrupted thus; But more than why. The expression of the text, though a singular one, was, I have no doubts,

So many miles upon her peaceful bosom;
 Frighting her pale-fac'd villages with war,
 And ostentation of despised arms?⁵
 Com'st thou because the anointed king is hence?
 Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
 And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
 Were I but now the lord of such hot youth,
 As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself, Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of
 men,
 From forth the ranks of many thousand French;
 O, then, how quickly should this arm of mine,
 Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee,
 And minister correction to thy fault!

the author's. It is of a colour with those immediately preceding :

"Grace me no grace, nor wish me no uncle."

A similar expression occurs in Twelfth Night :

"More than I love these eyes, more than my life,

"More, by all means, than I shall e'er love wife."

MALONE.

There seems to be an error in this passage, which I believe should run thus :

But more then: Why? why have they dar'd, &c.

This repetition of the word why, is not unusual for a person speaking with much warmth. M. MASON.

⁵ And ostentation of despised arms?] But sure the ostentation of despised arms would not fright any one. We should read :

—disposed arms, i. e. forces in battle array.

WARBURTON.

This alteration is harsh. Sis T. Hammer reads despightful. Mr. Upton gives this passage as a proof that our author uses the passive participle in an active sense. The copies all agree. Perhaps the old duke means to treat him with contempt as well as with severity, and to insinuate that he despises his power, as being able to master it. In this sense all is right. JOHNSON.

So, in this play :

"We'll make foul weather with despight teass."

STEVENS.

The meaning of this probably is—a beautiful display of arms which we despise. M. MASON.

BOLING. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault;

On what condition⁶ stands it, and wherein?

YORK. Even in condition of the worst degree,—
In gross rebellion, and detested treason;
Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come,
Before the expiration of thy time,
In braving arms against thy sovereign.

BOLING. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Hereford;

But as I come, I come for Lancaster.

And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace.

Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:⁷

You are my father, for, methinks, in you

I see old Gaunt alive; O, then, my father!

Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd

A wand'ring vagabond; my rights and royalties

Pluck'd from my arms perforce, and given away

To upstart unthrifts? Wherefore was I born?⁸

If that my cousin king be king of England,

It must be granted, I am duke of Lancaster.

You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman;

Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,

He should have sound his uncle Gaunt a father,

⁶ On what condition—] It should be, in what condition, i. e. in what degree of guilt. The particles in the old editions are of little credit. JOHNSON.

York's reply supports Dr. Johnson's conjecture;

"Even in condition," Re. MALONE.

⁷ Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:] i. e. with an impartial eye. "Every jurymen (says Sir Edward Coke) ought to be impartial and indifferent." MALONE.

⁸ —Wherefore was I born?] To what purpose serves birth and lineal succession? I am duke of Lancaster by the same right of birth as the king is king of England. JOHNSON.

To rouse¹ his wrongs, and chase them to the bay.²
 I am denied to sue my livery here,³
 And yet my letters-patent give me leave:
 My father's goods are all dilstrain'd, and sold;
 And these, and all, are all amiss employ'd,
 What would you have me do? I am a subject,
 And challenge law: Attornies are denied me;
 And therefore personally I lay my claim
 To my inheritance of free descent.

NORTH. The noble duke hath been too much abus'd.

ROSS. It stands your grace upon, to do him right.⁴

WILLO. Bate men by his endowments are made great.

YORK. My lords of England, let me tell you this,—

I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
 And labour'd all I could to do him right:
 But in this kind to come, in braving arms,
 Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
 To find out right with wrong,—it may not be;
 And you, that do abet him in this kind,
 Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

¹ To rouse his wrongs, and chase them to the bay.] By his wrongs are meant the persons who wrong him. M. MASON.

² —to sue my livery here.] A law phrase belonging to the feudal tenures. See notes on K. Henry IV. P. I. Act IV. sc. iii.

STEVENS.

³ It stands your grace upon, to do him right.] i. e. it is your interest, it is matter of consequence to you. So, in K. Richard III.

"———it stands me much upon,

"To stop all hopes whose growth may danger me."

Again, in Antony and Cleopatra:

"———it only stands

"Out lives upon, to use our strongest hands." STEVENS.

NORTH. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is

But for his own: and, for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;
And let him ne'er see joy, that breaks that oath.

YORK. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms;
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak, and all ill left:
But, if I could, by Him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But, since I cannot, be it known to you,
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;—
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there repose you for this night.

BOLING. An offer, uncle, that we will accept.
But we must win your grace, to go with us
To Bristol castle; which, they say, is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed, and pluck away,

YORK. It may be, I will go with you;—but yet
I'll pause;¹

For I am loath to break our country's laws.
Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things past redress, are now with me past care.²

[Exeunt.]

¹ It may be, I will go with you:—but yet I'll pause; I suspect, the words—with you, which spoil the metre, to be another interpolation. STEEVENS.

² Things past redress are now with me past care.] So, in Macbeth:

“—Things without remedy,

“Should be without regard.” STEEVENS.

S C E N E IV.⁴*A Camp in Wales.Enter SALISBURY,⁵ and a Captain.*

CAP. My lord of Salisbury, we have staid ten days,
 And hardly kept our countrymen together,
 And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
 Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

SAL. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman;
 The king reposeth all his confidence
 In thee.

CAP. 'Tis thought, the king is dead; we will not stay.
 The bay-trees in our country are all wither'd,⁶

⁴ Here is a scene so unartfully and irregularly thrust into an improper place, that I cannot but suspect it accidentally transposed; which, when the scenes were written on single pages, might easily happen in the wildness of Shakspeare's drama. This dialogue was, in the author's draught, probably the second scene in the ensuing act, and there I would advise the reader to insert it, though I have not ventured on so bold a change. My conjecture is not so presumptuous as may be thought. The play was not, in Shakspeare's time, broken into acts; the editions published before his death, exhibit only a sequence of scenes from the beginning to the end, without any hint of a pause of action. In a drama so desultory and erratic, left in such a state, transpositions might easily be made. JOHNSON.

⁵ ——— Salisbury, was John Montacute, Earl of Salisbury.

WALPOLE

⁶ The bay-trees, &c.] This enumeration of prodigies is in the highest degree poetical and striking. JOHNSON.

And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven;
 The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth,
 And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change;
 Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,—
 The one, in fear to lose what they enjoy,
 The other, to enjoy by rage and war:
 These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.—
 Farewell; our countrymen are gone and fled,
 As well assur'd, Richard their king is dead.

[Exit.

SAL. Ab, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mind,
 I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
 Fall to the base earth from the firmament!
 Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
 Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest:
 Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes;
 And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. [Exit.

Some of these prodigies are found in Holiofsbed: "In this yeare in a manner throughout all the realme of England, old baie trees withered," &c.

This was esteemed a bad omen; for, as I learn from Thomas Lupton's Syat Booke of Notable Thynges, 4to. bl. 1: "Neyther falling sycknes, neyther devyll, wyll infect or hurt one in that place where a Bay tree is. The Romaynes calles it the plant of the good angell," &c. STEEVENS.

ACT III. SCENE I.

Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol.

Enter BOLINGBROKE, YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, PERCY, WILLOUGHBY, ROSS: Officers behind with BUSHY and GREEN, prisoners.

BOLING. Bring forth these men.—

Bushy, and Green, I will not vex your souls
(Since presently your souls must part your bodies,)
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no charity: yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here, in the view of men,
I will unfold some causes of your death.
You have missed a prince, a royal king,
A bappy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unbapped and disfigur'd clean.
You have, in manner, with your sinful hours,
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him;
Broke the possession of a royal bed,
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.

Myself—a prince, by fortune of my birth;
Near to the king in blood; and near in love,
Till you did make him misinterpret me,—

7 ——— clean.] i. e. quite, completely. REED.

So, in our author's 75th Sonnet:

"And by and by, clean starved for a look." MALONE.

* You have, in manner, with your sinful hours,

Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him;

Broke the possession of a royal bed.] There is, I believe, no authority for this. Isabel, the queen of the present play, was but nine years old. Richard's first queen, Anne, died in 1392, and the king was extremely fond of her. MALONE.

VOL. XII.

G

Have sloop'd my neck under your injuries,
 And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
 Eating the bitter bread of banishment:
 Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
 Dispark'd my parks,³ and sell'd my forest woods;
 From my own windows torn my household coat,⁴
 Raz'd out my imprese, leaving me no sign,⁵—
 Save men's opinions, and my living blood,—
 To show the world I am a gentleman.
 This, and much more, much more than twice all
 this,

Condemns you to the death:—See them deliver'd over

To execution and the hand of death.

BUSHY. More welcome is the stroke of death to
 me,

Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell.

GREEN. My comfort is,—that heaven will take our souls,

And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

BOLING. My lord Northumberland, see them despatch'd.

[Exeunt NORTHUMBERLAND and Others, with prisoners.]

³ Dispark'd my parks,] To dispark is to throw down the hedges of an enclosure. Disparis. I meet with the word in Barlet's Alvarus et Quadruple Dictionary, 1580. It also occurs in The Epitaphism of Prince Henry, 1610: "Forsakes and Parkes of the Prince's disparked and in Lease," &c. STANFORD.

⁴ From my own windows torn my household coat,] It was the practice when coloured glass was in use, of which there are still some remains in old seats and churches, to anneal the arms of the family in the windows of the house. JOHNSON.

⁵ Raz'd out my imprese, &c.] The imprese was a device or motto. FEENE, in his Blazon of Gentry, 1585, observes, "that the arms, &c. of traitors and rebels may be defaced and removed, wheresoever they are fixed, or set." STANFORD.

Uncle, you say, the queen is at your house;
 For heaven's sake, fairly let her be entreated:
 Tell her, I send to her my kind commends;
 Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.

YORK. A gentleman of mine I have despatch'd
 With letters of your love to her at large.

BOLING. Thanks, gentle uncle.—Come, lords, away;

To fight with Glendower and his complices;
 A while to work, and, after, holiday.⁴ [Exeunt.

⁴ Thanks, gentle uncle.—Come, lords, away;

To fight with Glendower and his complices;

A while to work, and, after, holiday. } Though the intermediate line has taken possession of all the old copies, I have great suspicion of its being an interpolation; and have therefore ventured to throw it out. The first and third lines rhyme to each other, nor do I imagine this was casual, but intended by the poet. Were we to acknowledge the line genuine, it must argue the poet of forgetfulness and inattention to history. Bolingbroke is, as it were, but just arriv'd; he is now at Bristol, weak in his numbers; has had no meeting with a parliament; nor is so far assur'd of the succession, as to think of going to suppress insurrections before he is plant'd in the throne. Besides, we find the opposition of Glendower begins The First Part of K. Henry IV. and Mortimer's defeat by that hardy Welchman is the tidings of the first scene of that play. Again, though Glendower, in the very first year of K. Henry IV. began to be troublesome, put in for the supremacy of Wales, and imprison'd Mortimer; yet it was not till the succeeding year that the King employed any force against him. THOMAS.

This emendation, which I think is just, has been followed by Sir T. Hanmer, but is neglected by Dr. Warburton. JOHNSON.

It is evident from the preceding scene, that there was a force in Wales, which Bolingbroke might think it necessary to suppress; and why might not Shakspeare call it Glendower's? When we next see Bolingbroke, he is in Wales, and mentions his having receiv'd intelligence that the Welshmen are dispers'd. RYCE.

Mr. Heath observes, that Bolingbroke married to Chester, probably with a view to attack the Welsh army headed by Lord Salisbury. He thinks therefore the line is genuine. See fr. iii. p. 97. Stowe expressly says that "Owen Glendower saved King Richard at Eilat-Castile." MALONE.

SCENE II.⁴

The coast of Wales. A castle in view.

Flourish: drums and trumpets. Enter King RICHARD, Bishop of Carlisle, AUMERLE, and Soldiers.

K. RICH. Barkloughly castle call you this, at hand?

AUM. Yea, my lord: How brooks your grace the air,

After late tossing on the breaking seas?⁵

K. RICH. Needs must I like it well; I weep for joy,

To stand upon my kingdom once again.—

Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,

Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs:

As a long parted mother with her child

Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting;⁶

So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,

⁴ Here may be properly inserted the last scene of the second act.
JOHNSON.

⁵ After late tossing, &c.] The old copies redundantly read:
After your late tossing, &c. STEEVENS.

⁶ — smiles in meeting;] It has been proposed to read—in weeping; and this change the repetition in the next line seems plainly to point out. STEEVENS.

As a long parted mother with her child

Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting;]

"Ως αἰών, αἰσχρὸς φίλος ἐν χερσὶν εἶπεν

"Παιδ' εὖν ἢ δ' ἄρα μὴ κραιπνὴ δέξατο κόλπον

"ΔΑΚΡΥΟΕΝ ΤΕΛΑΛΑΖΑ." Hom. II. 2.

Perhaps smiles is here used as a substantive. As a mother plays fondly with her child from whom she has been a long time parted, crying, and at the same time smiling, at meeting him.

It has been proposed to read—smiles in weeping; and I once thought the emendation very plausible. But I am now persuaded the text is right. If we read weeping, the long parted mother and

And do thee favour with my royal hands.
 Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,
 Nor with thy sweets comfort his rav'nous sense:
 But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
 And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way;
 Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet,
 Which with usurping steps do trample thee.
 Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies:
 And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
 Guard it, I pray thee,⁷ with a lurking adder;
 Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch
 Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.—
 Mock not my senseless conjuration, lords;
 This earth shall have a feeling,⁸ and these stones
 Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
 Shall falter under foul rebellion's arms.

BISHOP. Fear not, my lord;⁹ that Power, that made you king,

Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all.
 The means that heaven yields must be embrac'd,
 And not neglected; else, if heaven would,

her child do not meet, and there is no particular cause assigned for either her smiles or her tears. MALONE.

From the actual smiles and tears of the long parted mother, &c. we may, I think, sufficiently infer that she had met with her child.

STEVENS.

⁷ Guard it, I pray thee,] Guard it, signifies here, as in many other places, border it. MALONE.

⁸ This earth shall have a feeling,] Perhaps Milton had not forgot this passage, when he wrote, in his Comus—

"—dumb things shall be mov'd to sympathize,

"And the brute earth shall lend her nerves, and shake."

STEVENS.

⁹ Fear not, my lord; &c.] Of this speech, the four last lines were restored from the first edition by Mr. Pope. They were, I suppose, omitted by the players only to shorten the scene, for they are worthy of the author and suitable to the personage.

JOHNSON.

And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse;²
The proffer'd means of succour and redress.

AUM. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends.

K. RICH. Discomfortable confin! know'st thou not,
That, when the searching eye of heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,³
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders, and in outrage, bloody here;
But when, from under this terrestrial ball,
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,³
And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders, treasons, and detested sins,
The cloak of night being pluck'd from off their backs,

² — if, if heaven would,

And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse;] Thus the quarto 1597, except that the word if is wanting. The quarto 1608, and the late editions, read — And we would not. The word if was supplied by Mr. Pope. Both the metre and the sense show that it was accidentally omitted in the first copy. MALONE.

³ — and lights the lower world,] The old copies read — that lights. The emendation was made by Dr. Johnson. Sense might be obtained by a slight transposition, without changing the words of the original text:

That when the searching eye of heaven, that lights

The lower world, is hid behind the globe; —

By the lower world, as the passage is amended by Dr. Johnson, we must understand, a world lower than this of ours; I suppose, our Antipodes. MALONE.

That this is the sense of the passage, is obvious from the King's application of the simile:

"So, when this thief, this traitor Bolingbroke, —

"Who all this while hath revell'd in the night,

"Whilst we were wand'ring with the antipodes, —

"Shall see us rising in our throne the east," &c. HANLEY.

The lower world may signify our world. MALONE.

³ He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,] It is not easy to point out an image more striking and beautiful than this, in any poet, whether ancient or modern. STEVENS.

Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?
 So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,—
 Who all this while hath revell'd in the night,
 Whilst we were wand'ring with the antipodes,—
 Shall see us rising in our throne the east,
 His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
 Not able to endure the sight of day,
 But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.
 Not all the water in the rough-rudè sea
 Can wash the balm from an anointed king:
 The breath of worldly men cannot depose
 The deputy elected by the Lord:³
 For every man that Bolingbroke hath prefs'd,
 To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,

³ The breath of worldly men, &c. } Here is the doctrine of indefeasible right expressed in the strongest terms; but our poet did not learn it so the reign of K. James, to which it is now the practice of all writers, whose opinions are regulated by fashion or interest, to impute the original of every tenet which they have been taught to think false or foolish. JOHNSON.

Far be it from me to palliate the conduct of the wretched James; but the truth is that the inherent rights of the people had been ill understood, or rather were not acknowledged, by his predecessors. The doctrine of the divine right of kings, and of the passive obedience of subjects, have never been carried further in any country than in this island, while the house of Tudor sat on the throne. Of this fact, the Homilies, composed during the reign of young Edward, and appointed in the Thirty-nine Articles to be read in churches, furnish striking and abundant proof. Take, as an instance, the following extract from the Homily against Disobedience and wilful Rebellion: "At the name of the king is very often attributed and given unto God in holy scriptures, so doth God himself in the same scriptures sometime vouchsafe to communicate his name with earthly princes, forming them Gods." 1st part. And in the 4th part, we are directed to "call to remembrance the heavy wrath and dreadful indignation of Almighty God against subjects as do only but inwardly grudge, murmur, and murmur against their governors, though their inward treason, so privily hatched in their breasts come not to an open declaration of their doings." HOLY WRITS,

God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
 A glorious angel: then, if angels fight, Weak men must fall; for heaven still guards the right.

Enter SALISBURY.

Welcome, my lord; How far off lies your power?

SAL. Nor near, nor further off, my gracious
 lord,

Than this weak arm: Discomfort guides my tongue,
 And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
 One day too late, I fear, my noble lord,
 Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth:
 O, call back yesterday, bid time return,
 And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men!
 To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,
 O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;
 For all the Welshmen, hearing thou wert dead,
 Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispers'd, and fled.

AUM. Comfort, my liege: Why looks your grace so pale?

K. RICH. But now, the blood of twenty thousand men

Did triumph in my face, and they are fled;
 And, till so much blood thither come again,
 Have I not reason to look pale and dead?⁴
 All souls that will be safe, fly from my side;
 For time hath set a blot upon my pride.

⁴ Have I not reason to look pale and dead?] So, in K. Henry IV.
 P. II:

"Even such a man——"

"So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,

"Drew Priam's cushions in the dead of night."

Again, in A Midsummer Night's Dream:

"So should a murderer look, so dead, so grim."

MALONE,

AUM. Comfort, my liege; remember who you are.

K. RICH. I had forgot myself: Am I not king?
Awake, thou sluggard⁵ majesty! thou sleep'st.
Is not the king's name forty thousand names?⁶
Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,
Ye favourites of a king; Are we not high?
High be our thoughts: I know, my uncle York Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who Comes here?

Enter SCROOP.

SCROOP. More health and happiness betide my liege,

Than can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him!

K. RICH. Mine ear is open,⁷ and my heart prepar'd;

The worst is worldly loss, thou canst unfold.

Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'twas my care;

And what loss is it, to be rid of care?

Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?

Greater he shall not be; if he serve God,

⁵ —sluggard—] So the folio. The quartos have—coward.
MALONE.

⁶ Is not the king's name forty thousand names?] Thus, in King Richard III.

“ Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength.”
See a speech of Antigonus, in Plutarch, of this kind, Vol. II. p. 199, 4to. Gr. S. W.

⁷ Mine ear is open, &c.] It seems to be the design of the poet to raise Richard to esteem in his fall, and consequently to interest the reader in his favour. He gives him only passive fortitude, the virtue of a confessor, rather than of a king. In his prosperity we saw him imperious and oppressive; but in his distress he is wise, patient, and pious. JOHNSON.

We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so :
 Revolt our subjects ? that we cannot mend ;
 They break their faith to God, as well as us :
 Cry, woe ; destruction, ruin, loss, decay ;
 The worst is—death, and death will have his day.

SCROOP. Glad am I, that your highness is so
 arm'd

To bear the tidings of calamity.
 Like an unseasonable stormy day,
 Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
 As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears ;
 So high above his limits swells the rage
 Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
 With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.
 White beads⁷ have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps

Against thy majesty ; boys, with women's voices,
 Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints⁸
 In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown :
 Thy very headsmen learn to bend their bows⁹

⁷ White beads.—Thus the quartos. 'The first folio, with a ridiculous blunder,—White beads. STEEVENS.'

⁸ —and clap their female joints—] Mr. Pope more elegantly reads—and clasp—, which has been adopted by the subsequent editors. But the emendation does not seem absolutely necessary.

MALONE.

Clap would be still nearer than clasp. RITSON.

Lee, in his Mithridates, has imitated this passage; Act IV:

"The very boys, like Cupids dress'd in arms,

"Clap their young harness'd thighs, and trust to battle."

STEEVENS.

⁹ Thy very headsmen learn to bend their bows.—] Such is the reading of all the copies; yet I doubt whether headsmen be right, for the bow seems to be mentioned here as the proper weapon of a headsmen. The king's headsmen were his chaplains. Trevisa calls himself the headman of his patron. Headman might likewise be any man maintained by charity to pray for his benefactor. Haumer reads—the very headsmen, but thy is better. JOHNSON.

Of double-fatal yew^a against thy state;
 Yea, distaff women manage rusty bills
 Against thy seat: both young and old rebel,
 And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. RICH. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so ill.

Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
 What is become of Bushy? where is Green?^b

The reading of the text is right enough. "As boys strive to speak big, and clasp their effeminate joints to stiff unwieldy arms," &c. "so his very bradsmen learn to bend their bows against him." Their do's not absolutely denote that the bow was their usual or proper weapon; but only taken up and appropriated by them on this occasion. PRECIV.

^a Of double-fatal yew—] Called so, because the leaves of the yew are poison, and the wood is employed for instruments of death. WARBURTON.

From some of the ancient statutes it appears that every Englishman, while archery was practised, was obliged to keep in his house either a bow of yew or some other wood. It should seem therefore that yews were not only planted in church-yards to defend the churchee from the wind, but on account of their use in making bows; while by the benefit of being secured in enclosed places, their poisonous quality was kept from doing mischief to cattle.

STEEVENS.

^b Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?

What is become of Bushy? where is Green?] Here are four of them named; and, within a very few lines, the king hearing they had made their peace with Bolingbroke, calls them these Judasses. But how was their peace made? Why, with the loss of their heads. This being explained, Aumerle says:

"Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire dead?"
 So that Bagot ought to be left out of the question: and, indeed he had made the best of his way for Chester, and from thence had escaped into Ireland.

The poet could not be guilty of so much forgetfulness and absurdity. The transcribers must have blundered. It seems probable to me that he wrote, as I have conjecturally altered the text:

Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is he got?

i. e. into what corner of my dominions is he slunk and absconded.

THEOBALD.

That they have let the dangerous enemy
Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?
If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it.

I warrant, they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

SCROOP. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord.

K. RICH. O villains, vipers, damn'd without redemption!

Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man!

Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that fling my heart!

Three Judasses, each one thrice worse than Judas!
Would they make peace? terrible hell make war
Upon their spotted souls for this offence!

SCROOP. Sweet love, I see, changing his property,
Turns to the fourest and most deadly hate:—
Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made
With heads, and not with hands: those whom you curse,

Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,
And lie full low, grav'd¹ in the hollow ground.

This emendation Dr. Warburton adopts. Hammer leaves a blank after Wiltshire. I believe the author, rather than transcriber, made a mistake. Where is he got, does not sound in my ear like an expression of Shakspeare. JOHNSON.

I agree with Johnson in thinking that this was a mistake of the author's, because we find a mistake of the same nature in the second act, where Bolingbroke says, that Bristol castle was held by Bushy and Bagot; yet it is certain that Bagot was not taken at Bristol, for we find him afterwards accusing Aumerle of treason; and in the parting scene between him, Green, and Bushy, he declares his intention of flying to the King in Ireland. M. MASON.

Perhaps Shakspeare intended to mark more strongly the perturbation of the king by making him inquire at first for Bagot, whose loyalty, on further recollection, might show him the impropriety of his question. MALONE.

¹ — grav'd —] The verb, to grave, is not peculiar to

AUM. Is Busby, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire, dead?

SCROOP. Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their heads,

AUM. Where is the duke my father with his power?

K. RICH. No matter where; of comfort no man speak:

Let's talk of graves, of worms; and epitaphs;
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
Let's choose executors, and talk of wills;
And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposed bodies to the ground?
Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
And nothing can we call our own, but death;
And that small model of the barren earth,⁵
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.⁶
For heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground,

Shakspeare. So, in Gower De Confessione Amantis, lib. iii, fol. 58:

"Unto the hound, unto the raven,

"She was none otherwise given." STEVENS.

[⁵ And that small model of the barren earth,] He uses model for mould. That earth, which closing upon the body, takes its form. This interpretation the next line seems to authorize. JOHNSON.

Perhaps, all that model, in the present instance, means, is the sepulchral hillock of earth which ascertains the length and breadth of the body beneath it. In this sense it may be termed its model.

STEVENS.

Shakspeare generally uses model, not for an exemplar, but for a thing made after a pattern. So, in a former scene of this play:

"—thou see'st thy wretched brother die,

"Who was the model of thy father's life."

See Vol. IX. p. 141, n. 5. Model, however, may be used for mould. See Minchen's Dict. io v. MALONE.

[⁶ Which serves as paste &c.] A metaphor, not of the most sublime kind, taken from a pie. JOHNSON.

And tell sad stories of the death of kings:—
 How some have been depos'd, some slain in war;
 Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd;⁷
 Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd;
 All murder'd;—For within the hollow crown,
 That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
 Keeps death his court: and there the antic sits,⁸ Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp:
 Allowing him a breath, a little scene
 To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
 Infusing him with self and vain conceit,—
 As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
 Were brass impregnable; and, humour'd thus,
 Comes at the last, and with a little pin
 Bores through his castle wall, and—farewell king!
 Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
 With solemn reverence; throw away respect,
 Tradition,⁹ form, and ceremonious duty,
 For you have but mistook me all this while:
 I live with bread like you, feel want, taste grief,
 Need friends:—Subjècted thus,
 How can you say to me—I am a king?

⁷ — the ghosts they have depos'd; Such is the reading of all the old copies. The modern editors, in the room of have depos'd, substituted dispossess'd. STEEVENS.

⁸ — there the antic sits.] Here is an allusion to the antic or fool of old farces, whose chief part is to deride and disturb the graves and more splendid personages. JOHNSON.

If there be any such allusion intended, it is to the old Vicar, who, indeed, appears to have been such a character as Dr. Johnson describes. The Fool was rather introduced to be laughed at.

RITSON.

So, in the First Part of K. Henry VI:

“Thou antic death, which laugh’st us here to scorn!”

STEEVENS.

⁹ Tradition.] This word seems here used for traditional practices; that is, established or customary usage. JOHNSON.

CAR. My lord, wise men ne'er wail their present woes,

But presently prevent the ways to wail.
To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe,
And so your follies fight against yourself.
Fear, and be slain; no worse can come, to fight:
And fight and die, is death destroying death;³
Where fearing dying, pays death servile breath.

AUM. My father hath a power, inquire of him;
And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. RICH. Thou chid'st me well:—Proud Boling-broke, I come.

To change blows with thee for our day of doom.

Thisague-fit of fear is over-blown;

An easy task it is, to win our own.—

Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

SCROOP. Men judge by the complexion of the sky

The state and inclination of the day:

So may you by my dull and heavy eye.

My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.

I play the torturer, by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken:—
Your uncle York hath join'd with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up,
And all your southern gentlemen in arms
Upon his party.

K. RICH. Thou hast said enough.—

Bestrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth

[To AUMERLE.

* — death destroying death; } That is, to die fighting, is to return the evil that we suffer, to destroy the destroyers. I once read death; defying death; but destroying is as well. JOHNSON.

Of that sweet way I was in to despair!
 What say you now? What comfort have we now?
 By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly,
 That bids me be of comfort³ any more.
 Go, to Flint castle; there I'll pine away;
 A king, woe's slave, shall kingly woe obey.
 That power I have, discharge; and let them go
 To ear the land⁴ that hath some hope to grow,
 For I have none:—Let no man speak again
 To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

AUM. My liege, one word.

K. RICH. He does me double wrong,
 That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
 Discharge my followers, let them hence;—Away,
 From Richard's night, to Bolingbroke's fair day.

[Exeunt.]

³ I'll hate him everlastingly,

That bids me be of comfort— } This sentiment is drawn from nature. Nothing is more offensive to a mind convinced that its distress is without a remedy, and preparing to submit quietly to irreparable calamity, than these petty and conjectured comforts which unskillful officiousness thinks it virtue to administer.

⁴ To ear the land— } i. e. to plough it. So, in All's well that ends well; JOHNSON.

"He that ears my land, spares my team." STEEVENS.

S C E N E III.

Wales. *Before Flint Castle.*³

Enter with drum and colours, BOLINGBROKE and Forces; YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, and Others.

BOLING. So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed,
With some few private friends, upon this coast.

NORTH. The news is very fair and good, my lord;
Richard, not far from hence, hath hid his head.

YORK. It would beseem the lord Northumberland,
To say — king Richard: — Alack the heavy day,
When such a sacred king should hide his head!

NORTH. Your grace mistakes me;⁴ only to be brief,
Left I his title out.

YORK. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head,⁵ your whole head's length.

BOLING. Mistake not, uncle, further than you should.

³ Flint Castle.] In our former edition I had called this scene the same with the preceding. That was at Barknoughly castle, on the coast where Richard landed; but Bolingbroke never marched further in Wales than to Flint. The interview between him and Richard was at the castle of Flint, where this scene should be said to lie, or rather in the camp of Bolingbroke before that castle. — "Go to Flint castle." See above. STEEVENS.

⁴ Your grace mistakes me;] The word — me, which is wanting in the old copies, was supplied by Sir T. Hanmer. STEEVENS.

⁵ For taking so the head,] To take the head is, to cut without restraint; to take undue liberties. We now say, we give the horse his head, when we relax the reins. JOHNSON.

YORK. Take not, good cousin, further than you should.

Lest you mis-take: The heavens are o'er your head.

BOLING. I know it, uncle; and oppose not Myself against their will. — But who comes here?⁶

Enter PERCY.

Well, Harry; what, will not this castle yield?

PERCY. The castle royally is mann'd, my lord, Against thy entrance.

BOLING. Royally!

Why, it contains no king?

PERCY.

Yes, my good lord,

It doth contain a king; king Richard lies

Within the limits of yon lime and stone:

And with him are lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury,

Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman

Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn.

NORTH. Belike, it is the bishop of Carlisle.

⁶ I know it, uncle; and oppose not

Myself against their will. — But who comes here?] These lines should be regulated thus:

I know it, uncle; and oppose not myself

Against their will. But who comes here?

Such is the regulation of the old copies. MALONE.

I regard the word myself, as an interpolation, and conceive Shakspeare to have written —

— and oppose not

Against their will.

To oppose may be here a verb neuter. So, in K. Lear:

" — a servant, that'll'd with remorse,

" Oppos'd against the ed." STEEVENS.

⁷ Well, Harry; what will not this castle yield?] The old copy destroys thy mere by reading — Welcome, Harry, — The emendation is Sir T. Hamner's. STEEVENS.

BOLING. Noble lord, * [To NORTH,
Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle; *
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parle
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver.
Harry Bolingbroke
On both his knees, doth kiss king Richard's hand;
And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person: hither come
Even at his feet to lay my arms and power;
Provided that, my banishment repeal'd,
And lands restor'd again, be freely granted:
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood,
Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:
The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall show.
Go, signify as much; while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain. —

[NORTHUMBERLAND advances to the Castle, with a Trumpet.

Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drum,
That from the castle's totter'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perus'd.
Methinks, king Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements

* Noble lord,

Go to the rude ribs, &c.] It is observable that our author in his addresses to persons, often begins with an hemistich. So, in Trinides and Cressida, Act II. sc. iii:

"Agam. Princes.

"What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?"

This observation may be of use in other places, where in the old copies, by the mistake of the transcriber, the metre is destroyed by this regulation not being observed. MALONE.

H 2

Of fire and water, when their thund'ring shock
 At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.
 Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water:
 The rage he his, while on the earth I rain
 My waters; on the earth, and not on him.
 March on, and mark king Richard how he looks.

A parlc sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the walls King RICHARD, the Bishop of Carlisle,² AUWERLE, SCROOP, and SALISBURY.

YORK. See, see, king Richard doth himself appear,³

As doth the blushing discontented sun
 From out the fiery portal of the east;
 When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
 To dim his glory, and to stain the track
 Of his bright passage to the occident.
 Yet looks he like a king; behold, his eye,
 As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth
 Controlling majesty; Alack, alack, for woe,
 That any harm should stain so fair a show!

K. RICH. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood

To watch the fearful bending of thy knee,
 [To NORTHUMBERLAND.
 Because we thought ourself thy lawful king:
 And if we be, how dare thy joints forget

² — the Bishop of Carlisle,] was Thomas Merkes. WALPOLE.

³ See, see, king Richard doth himself appear,] The following six lines are absurdly given to Bolingbroke, who is made to condemn his own conduct and disculp the king's. It is plain these six and the four following all belong to York. WARBURTON.

It should be observed that the four last of these lines are in all the copies given to York. SKELTON.

To pay their awful duty to our presence?
 If we be not, show us the hand of God
 That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship;
 For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
 Can gripe the sacred handle of our scepter,
 Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp.
 And though you think, that all, as you have done,
 Have torn their souls, by turning them from us,
 And we are barren, and bereft of friends; —
 Yet know, — my master, God omnipotent,
 Is must'ring in his clouds, on our behalf,
 Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
 Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,
 That lift your vassal hands against my head,
 And threat the glory of my precious crown.
 Tell Bolingbroke, (for yond', methinks, he is,) —
 That every stride he makes upon my land,
 Is dangerous treason: He is come to ope
 The purple testament of bleeding war;³
 But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
 Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
 Shall ill become the flower of England's face;⁴
 Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace

³ The purple testament of bleeding war:] I once thought that Shakespeare might have had the fabled book (which is frequently covered with purple leather) in his thoughts; but the following note renders such a supposition extremely doubtful. MALONE.

I believe our author uses the word testament in its legal sense. Bolingbroke is come to open the testament of war, that he may peruse what is decreed there in his favour. Purple is an epithet referring to the future effusion of blood. STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens is certainly right in his interpretation of this passage. See Julius Cæsar:

"Now, while your purpl'd hands do reek and smoke,

"Fulfil your pleasure." MALONE.

⁴ *But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
 Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
 Shall ill become the flower of England's face*:] By the flower of England's face is meant the choicest youths of England, who shall

To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pastures' grafs¹ with faithful English blood.

NORTH. The King of heaven forbid, our lord the king

Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice-noble cousin,
Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand,
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon thy royal grandfire's bones;
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious head;²
And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt;³

be slaughtered in this quarrel, or have bloody moons. The flower of England's foam, to design her choicest youth, is a fine and noble expression. Peisicles, by a similar thought, said "that the destruction of the Athenian youth was a fatality like cutting off the spring from the year." WARBURTON.

Dr. Warburton reads—light in peace, but live in peace is more suitable to Richard's intention, which is to tell him, that though he should get the crown by rebellion, it will be long before it will live in peace, he so settled as to be firm. The flower of England's foam, is very happily explained JOHNSON.

The flower of England's foam, I believe, means England's flowery face, the flowery juvenility of England's soul. The same kind of expression is used in Sidney's Asiadis, p. 2: "—opening the cherry of her lips," i. e. her cherry lips. Again, p. 240, edit. 1633: "—the sweet and beautiful flower of her foam."

Again Dryden, in Mortimer's Epistle to Queen Isabella:

"And in the field advance our plumed crest,

"And march upon fair England's flow'ry breasts."

STEVENS.

¹ Her pastures' grafs —] Old copies — pastor. Corrected by Mr. Theobald. MALONE.

² And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt] Dr. Warburton would read —

And by the warlike hand of buried Gaunt; and this, no doubt, was Shakspeare's meaning, though he has succeeded in misplacing the epithets. Thus, in King John, we have —

"There is no malice in this burning coal," in

of —

"There is no malice burning in this coal."

]

And by the worth and honour of himself,
Comprising all that may be sworn or said, —
His coming hither hath no further scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Infranchisement immediate on his knees :
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend⁴ to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just ;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

K. RICH. Northumberland, say, — thus the king returns ; —

His noble cousin is right welcome hither ;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction :
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends. —

Again, in A Midsummer Night's Dream :

" But earthlier happy," instead of "earthly happier."

Again, in King Henry VI. P. II.

" These hands are free from guiltless bloodshedding," instead of —

" These guiltless hands are free from bloodshedding."

Again, ibid. in P. III :

" Until my misshap'd trunk that bears this head," instead of —

" Until my head that this misshap'd trunk bears."

Again, in Antony and Cleopatra :

" We cannot call her winds and waters, fight and tears," instead of —

" We cannot call her fight and tears, winds and waters," and in the same play we have proof of harness, for harness of proof;
as elsewhere miserable most, for most miserable ; desperately mortal, for mostally desperate ; athens of precept, for precept of actions &c.

RITSON.

⁴ — commend —] i. e. commit. See Minshew's Dict. in v.
STEVENS.

We do debase ourself, cousin, do we not,
[To AUMERLE,
 To look so poorly, and speak so fair?
 Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

AUM. No, my good lord; let's fight with gentle
 words,
 Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful
 swords.

K. RICH. O God! o God! that e'er this tongue of mine,
 That laid the sentence of dread banishment
 On yon proud man, should take it off again
 With words of sooth! ⁵ O, that I were as great
 As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
 Or that I could forget what I have been!
 Or not remember what I must be now!
 Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to beat,

Since foes have scope to heat both thee and me.

AUM. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke.

K. RICH. What must the king do now? Must he submit?

The king shall do it. Must he be depos'd?
 The king shall be contented: Must he lose
 The name of king? o'God's name, let it go:
 I'll give my jewels, for a set of heads;
 My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
 My gay apparel, ⁶ for an alms-man's gown;

⁵ With words of sooth:] Sooth is swear as well as true. In this place sooth means swiftness or softness, a signification yet retained in the verb to sooth. JOHNSON.

⁶ My gay apparel, &c.] Dr. Grey observes, "that King Richard's expense in regard to dress, was very extraordinary."

My figur'd goblets, for a dish of wood;
 My scepter, for a palmer's walking-staff;
 My subjects, for a pair of carved saints;
 And my large kingdom for a little grave,
 A little little grave, an obscure grave:—
 Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
 Some way of common trade,* where subjects' feet
 May hourly trample on their sovereign's head:
 For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live;
 And, buried once, why not upon my head? —
 Aumerle, thou weep'st; My tender-hearted coun-
 sin!—

We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
 Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
 And make a dearth in this revolting land.

Hollinshed has the same remark; and adds, that he had "one cote which he caused to be made for him of gold and stone, valued at 30,000 marks." STEEVENS.

Stowe, in his Survey, says, "to the value of three thousand marks." So also, in Vita Ricardi Secundi, published by T. Hearne, p. 156. MALONE.

* Or I'll be buried in the king's highway.

Some way of common trade.] So, in Lord Surrey's Translation of the second book of Virgil's Æneid:

"A postern with a blind wicket there was,

"A common trade, to pass through Priam's house,"

"Limen erat, cæcæque fores, & pervias usus,

"Testorum intus se Priami." —

The phrase is still used by common people. When they speak of a road much frequented, they say, "it is a road of much traffic." Shakspeare uses the word in the same sense in King Henry VIII.

"Stand in the gap and trade of more preferment."

STEEVENS.

* — on their sovereign's head:] Shakspeare is very apt to deviate from the pathetic to the ridiculous. Had the speech of Richard ended at this line, it had exhibited the natural language of submissive misery, conforming in intention to the present fortune, and calmly ending its purposes in death. JOHNSON.

Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
 And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
 As thus;—To drop them still upon one place,
 Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
 Within the earth; and, therein laid, There lies
Two kinsmen, digg'd their graves with weeping eyes?
 Would not this ill do well? Well, well, I see
 I talk but idly, and you mock at me.
 Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
 What says king Bolingbroke? will his majesty
 Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
 You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says—ay.⁹

NORTH. My lord, in the base court^a he doth attend

To speak with you; may't please you to come down.

K. RICH. Down, down, I come; like glistering
 Phaeton,

Wanting the manage of unruly jades.

[NORTH. retires to BOLING.

In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,
 To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace.

In the base court? Come down? Down, court!
 down king!

For night-owls shriek, where mounting larks should sing. [Exeunt, from above.

⁹ — Bolingbroke says—ay.] Here is another instance of injury done to the poet's metre by changing his orthography. I, which was Shakspeare's word, rhymed very well with die; but ay has quite a different sound. See a note on The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act V. Vol. V. p. 189, n. 8. TWEEDITT.

In some counties ay is at this day pronounced with a sound very little differing from that of I MALONE.

^a — base court —] Base court, FR. So, in Hinde's Elishe Libidineuse, 1606: "—they were, for a public observation, brooght into the base court of the palace." Again, in Greene's Forewell to Follie, 1617: "—began, at the entrance into the base court, to use these words." STEVENS.

BOLING. What says his majesty?

NORTH. Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantick man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King RICHARD, and his Attendants, below.

BOLING. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.

My gracious lord,— [Kneeling.

K. RICH. Fair cousin, you debase your princely
knee,

To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know, Thus high at least, [Touching his own head.] although your knee be low.

BOLING. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.

K. RICH. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.

BOLING. So far be mine, my most redoubted
lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.

K. RICH. Well you deserve: They well deserve to have,

That know the strong'st and surest way to get.
Uncle, give me your hand: nay, dry your eyes;
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.—
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.
What you will have, I'll give, and willing too;
For do we must, what force will have us do.
Set on towards London: Cousin, is it so?

BOLING. Yea, my good lord.

K. RICH.

Then I must not say, no.³

[Flourish. - Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Langley. The Duke of York's Garden.

Enter the Queen, and two Ladies.

QUEEN. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,

To drive away the heavy thought of care?

1 LADY. Madam, we'll play at bowls.

QUEEN.

'Twill make me think,

The world is full of rubs, and that my fortune
Runs 'gainst the bias.

2 LADY.

Madam, we will dance.

QUEEN. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.

1 LADY. Madam, we'll tell tales.

QUEEN.

Of sorrow, or of joy?⁴

³ Then I must not say, no.] "The duke with a high sharpe voyce bade bring forth the kings horses, and then two little nagges, not worth forty franks, were brought forth; the king was set on the one, and the earle of Salisburie on the other: and thus the duke brought the king from Flint to Chester, where he was delivered to the duke of Glocesters sonne and to the earle of Arundels sonne, (that loved him but little, for he had put their fathers to death,) who led him straight to the castle." Stowe, (p. 521, edit. 1605.) from a manuscript account written by a person who was present. MALONE.

⁴ Of sorrow, or of joy?] All the old copies concur in reading —
Of sorrow, or of grief.
Mr. Pope made the necessary alteration. STEPHENS.

1 LADY. Of either, madam,

QUEEN.

Of neither, girl:

For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain.

1 LADY. Madam, I'll sing.

QUEEN.

'Tis well, that thou hast cause;
But thou should'st please me better, would'st thou weep,

1 LADY. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.

QUEEN. And I could weep,⁵ would weeping do me good,

And never borrow any tear of thee.

But stay, here come the gardeners:

Let's step into the shadow of these trees.—

Enter a Gardener, and two Servants.

My wretchedness unto a row of pins,
They'll talk of state; for every one doth so
Against a change:⁶ Woe is forerun with woe.

[Queen and Ladies retire.]

⁵ And I could weep.] The old copies read—And I could sing.

STEEVENSON.

Mr. Pope made the emendation. MALONE.

⁶ Against a change: Woe is forerun with woe.] The poet, according to the common doctrine of prognostication, supposes dejection to forebode calamity, and a kingdom to be filled with rumours of sorrow when any great disaster is impending. The sense is, that public evils are always prefigured by public peevishness, and plaintive conversation. JOHNSON.

GARD. Go, bind thou up yon' dangling apri-cocks,

Which, like unruly children, make their fire
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight;
Give some supportance to the bending twigs.—
Go thou, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of too-fast-growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be even in our government.—
You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

1 SERV. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,

Keep law, and form, and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate?⁶
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chok'd up,
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots disorder'd,⁷ and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?

GARD.

Hold they peace:—

* —our firm estate?] How could he say ours when he immediately subjoins, that it was inferm? we should read:

—a firm state. WARBURTON.

The servant says ours, meaning the state of the garden in which they are at work. The state of the metaphorical garden was indeed inferm, and therefore his reasoning is very naturally induced. Why [says he] should we be careful to preserve order in the narrow circumscription of this rot state, when the great state of the kingdom is in disorder? I have replaced the old reading which Dr. Warburton would have discontinued in favour of his own conjecture.

STEEVENS.

⁷ ? Her knots disorder'd.] Knots are figures planted in boxes, the lines of which frequently intersect each other. So, Milton:

"Flowers, worthy Paradise, which not nice art

"In beds and curious knots, but nature boon

"Pour'd forth." STEEVENS.

He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,
 Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf;
 The weeds, that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,

That seem'd, in eating him, to hold him up,
 Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
 I mean, the earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

1 SERV. What, are they dead?

GARD. They are; and Bolingbroke
 Hath seiz'd the wasteful king.—Oh! What pity is it,
 That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,
 As we this garden! We at time of year^a
 Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees;
 Left, being over-proud with sap and blood,
 With too much riches it confound itself:
 Had he done so to great and growing men,
 They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
 Their fruits of duty. All superfluous branches^b
 We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
 Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
 Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.

1 SERV. What, think you then, the king shall be depos'd?

GARD. Depress'd he is already; and depos'd,
 'Tis doubt, he will be: Letters came last night

^a —We at time of year—] The word, We is not so the old copies. The context shows that some word was omitted at the press; and the subsequent lines—

“—superfluous branches

“We lop away,—”

renders it highly probable that this was the word. MALONE.

^b —All superfluous branches—] Thus the second folio. The first omits the word—all, and thereby hurts the metre; for superfluous is never accented on the third syllable. STEEVENS.

^c 'Tis doubt, he will be:] We have already had an instance of this uncommon phraseology in the present play:

To a dear friend of the good duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.

QUEEN. O, I am press'd to death,
Through want of speaking!¹—Thou, old Adam's likeness, [Coming from her concealment.
Set to dress this garden,² how dares
Thy harsh-rude tongue sound this unpleasing news?³

¹ He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt,

² When time shall call him home," &c.

Doubt is the reading of the quarto, 1597. The folio reads—doubted. I have found reason to believe that some alterations even in that valuable copy were made arbitrarily by the editor.

MALONE.

³ O, I am press'd to death,

Through want of speaking!] The poet alludes to the ancient legal punishment called peinam forte & dure, which was inflicted on those persons, who, being arraigned, refused to plead, remaining obstinately silent. They were press'd to death by a heavy weight laid upon their stomachs. MALONE.

²—to dress this garden.] This was the technical language of Shakspeare's time. So, in Holy Wilt: "—and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it." Gen. iii. 25.

MALONE.

³—how dares

Thy harsh-rude tongue, &c.] So, in Hamlet:

"What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue

"In noise so rude against me?"

I have quoted this passage only to justify the restoration of the word rude, which has been rejected in some modern editions.

A line in King John may add support to the restoration here made from the old copy:

"To whom he sung in rude harsh-sounding rhymes."

Some words seem to have been omitted in the first of these lines. We might read:

Set to dress out this garden. Say, how dares, &c.

It is always safer to add than to omit.

MALONE.

I would read Set let to dress this garden.—Mr. Malone's quotation from Genesis leaves to show that "dress out" was not the Elizabethan phrase.

Neither can I concur with the same gentleman's opinion that "it is always safer to add than to omit;" since, in Dr. Farmer's

What Eve; what serpent hath suggested thee
 To make a second fall of cursed man?
 Why dost thou say, king Richard is depos'd?
 Darest thou, thou little better thing than earth,
 Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how,
 Cam'st thou by these ill tidings? speak, thou wretch.

GARD. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I,
 To breathe this news; yet, what I say, is true.
 King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
 Of Bolingbroke; their fortunes both are weigh'd:
 In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
 And some few vanities that make him light;
 But, in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
 Besides himself, are all the English peers,
 And with that odds he weighs king Richard down.
 Post you to London, and you'll find it so;
 I speak no more than every one doth know.

QUEEN. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
 Doth not thy embassy belong to me,
 And am I last that knows it? O, thou think'st
 To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go,
 To meet at London London's king in woe.—
 What, was I born to this! that my sad look
 Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?—
 Gardener, for telling me this news of woe,
 I would, the plants thou graft'st, may never grow.⁴

[Exit Queen and Ladies.]

judgement as well as my own, the irregularities of our author's measure are too frequently occasioned by gross and manifest interpolations. STEEVENS.

⁴ I would, the plants, &c.] This execution of the queen is somewhat ludicrous, and unsuitable to her condition; the gar-

GARD. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse,

I would my skill were subject to thy curse.—
Here did she drop a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, four herb of grace:
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.

{Exeunt.

deney's reflection is better adapted to the state both of his mind and his fortune. Mr. Pope, who has been throughout this play very diligent to reject what he did not like, has yet, I know not why, spared the last line of this act. JOHNSON.

I would, the plants thou graft'st, may never grow.] So, in The Rape of Lucretia:

"This bastard graft shall never come to growth."

MALONE.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

London. Westminster Hall.⁵

*The Lords spiritual on the right side of the throne;
the Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.*

Enter BOLINGBROKE, AUMERLE, SURREY,⁶ NORTHUMBERLAND, PERCY, FITZWATER,⁷ another Lord, Bishop of Carlisle, Abbot of Westminster, and Attendants. Officers behind, with BAGOT.

BOLING. Call forth Bagot;—

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;
What thou dost know of noble Gloster's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless end.⁸

BAGOT. Then set before my face the lord Aumerle.

BOLING. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

BAGOT. My lord Aumerle, I know, your daring tongue

⁵ —Westminster Hall.] The rebuilding of Westminster Hall, which Richard had begun in 1397, being finished in 1399, the first meeting of parliament in the new edifice was for the purpose of deposing him. MALONE.

⁶ —Surrey.] Thomas Holland earl of Kent. He was brother to John Holland duke of Exeter, and was created duke of Surrey in the first year of King Richard the Second, 1397. The dukes of Surrey and Exeter were half brothers to the king, being sons of his mother Joan, (daughter of Edmund earl of Kent) who after the death of her second husband, Lord Thomas Holland, married Edward the Black Prince. MALONE.

⁷ —Fitzwater.] The christian name of this nobleman was Walter. WALFOLK.

⁸ —his timeless end.] Timeless for unshewy. WARBURTON.

Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.
 In that dead time when Gloster's death was plotted,
 I heard you say,—*Is not my arm of length,
 That reacheth from the restless English court
 As far as Calais, to my uncle's head?*
 Amongst much other talk, that very time,
 I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
 The offer of an hundred thousand crowns,
 Than Bolingbroke's return to England;
 Adding withal, how blest this land would be,
 In this your cousin's death.

AUM.

Princes, and noble lords,

What answer shall I make to this base man?

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,²

On equal terms to give him chastisement?

Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd

With the attainder of his slanderous lips.—

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,

That marks thee out for bell: I say, thou liest,

And will maintain, what thou hast said, is false,

In thy heart-blood, though being all too base

To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

BOLING. Bagot, forbear, thou shalt not take it up.

AUM. Excepting one, I would he were the best

In all this presence, that hath mov'd me so.

FITZ. If that thy valour stand on sympathies;³

² —my fair stars,] I rather think it should be stem, being of the royal blood. WARBURTON.

I think the present reading unexceptionable. The birth is supposed to be influenced by the stars, therefore our author, with his usual license takes stars for birth. JOHNSON.

We learn from Pliny's Natural History, that the vulgar error assigned the bright and fair stars to the rich and great: "Sidus fixis attributa nobis, & clara divitibus, mixta pauperibus," &c. Lib. I. cap. viii. ANONYMOUS.

³ If that thy valour stand on sympathies,] Here is a translated

There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine:
 By that fair sun that shows me where thou stand'st,
 I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
 That thou wert cause of noble Gloster's death.
 If thou deny'st it, twenty times thou liest;
 And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
 Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.³

sense much harsher than that of stars explained in the foregoing note. Aumerle has challenged Bagot with some hesitation, as not being his equal, and therefore one whom according to the rules of chivalry, he was not obliged to fight, as a noble's life was not to be staked in a duel against a base. Fitzwater then throws down his gage, a pledge of battle; and tells him that if he stands upon sympatry, that is, upon equality of blood, the combat is now offered him by a man of rank not inferior to his own. Sympatry is an affection incident at once to two subjects. This community of affection implies a likeness or equality of nature, and thence our poet transferred the term to equality of blood.

JOHNSON.

³ —[my rapier's point.] Shakspeare deserts the manners of the age in which his drama was placed, very often without necessity or advantage. The edge of a sword had served his purpose as well as the point of a rapier, and he had then escaped the impropriety of giving the English nobles a weapon which was not seen in England till two centuries afterwards. JOHNSON.

Mr. Ritson censures this note in the following terms: "It would be well however, though not quite so easy for some learned critic to bring some proof in support of this and such like assertions. Without which the authority of Shakspeare is at least equal to that of Dr. Johnson." It is probable that Dr. Johnson did not see the necessity of citing any authority for a fact so well known, or suspect that any person would demand one. If an authority however only is wanted, perhaps, the following may be deemed sufficient to justify the Doctor's observation: "—at that time two other Englishmen, Sir W. Stanley, and Rowland Ynke, got an ignominious name of traitors. This Yorks, born in London, was a man most negligent and lazy, but desperately hardy; he was in his time most famous among those who respected fencing, having been the first that brought into England that wicked and pernicious fashion to fight in the fields in duels with a rapier called a uck, only for the thrust: the English having till that very time used to fight with bare swords, hacking and cutting one the other."

AUM. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.

FITZ. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.

AUM. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

PERCY. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true,

In this appeal, as thou art all unjust:

And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,

To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing; seize it, if thou dar'st.

AUM. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

LORD. I take the earth to the like, forsworn armed with targets or bucklers, with very broad weapons, accounting it not to be a manly action to fight by throwing and flinging, and chiefly under the waite." Dacres's Annals of Queen Elizabeth, 410, 1623, p. 223. sub anno, 1587.
Aumerle; ⁴

Again, in Bulleyn's Dialogue between Sagrarffe, and Chirurge, fol. 1579, p. 20: "There is a new kynd of instruments to let bloud withall, which beynge the bloud-letters sometime to the gallows, because hee stryketh to deepe. These instruments are called the russius tucks, and loze fowling rapier: weapons more malicorous than manly." RARE.

⁴ I take the earth to the like, &c.] This speech I have restored from the first edition in humble imitation of former editors, though, I believe, against the mind of the author. For the earth I suppose we should read, thy oath. JOHNSON.

To take the earth is, at present, a fox-hunter's phrase. So, in The Blind Beggar of Alexandria, 1598:

"I'll follow him until he take the earth."

But I know not how it can be applied here. It should seem, however, from the following passage in Warner's Albion's England, 1602, B. III. c. xvi, that the expression is yet capable of another meaning:

"Lo here my gage, (he terr'd his glove) thou know'st the victor's meed."

To terr the glove was, I suppose, to dash it on the earth.

And spur thee on with full as many lies
As may be holla'd in thy treacherous ear
From sun to sun :⁵ there is my honour's pawn ;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

Let me add, however, in support of Dr. Johnson's conjecture, that the word oath, in Twelfth and Crispin, quarto 1609, is corrupted in the same manner. Instead of the "—untraded oath," it gives "—untraded oath." We might read, only changing the place of one letter, and altering another:

I take thy heart to the lie,—

i. e. I put thy valour to the same trial. So, in King Henry IV. Act V. sc. iii:

"How show'd his take? seem'd it in contempt?"

The quarto, 1597, reads—take; the succeeding quartos, viz. 1598, 1608, and 1615, have take. STEEVENS.

Take is the reading of the first and best quarto in 1597. In that printed in the following year the word was changed to take; but all the alterations made in the several editions of our author's plays in quarto, after the first, appear to have been made either arbitrarily or by negligence. (I do not mean to include copies containing new and additional matter.) I confess I am unable to explain either reading; but I adhere to the elder, as more likely to be the true one. MALONE.

⁵ From sun to sun:] i. e. as I think, from sun-rise to sun-set. So, in Cymbeline:

"Imo, How many score of miles may we well ride

"Twixt hour and hour?

"Pisa. One score 'twixt sun and sun,

"Madam, 's enough for you, and too much too."

"The time appointed for the duello (says Saviolo) hath alwaies bene 'twixt the rising and the setting sun; and whoever in that time doth not prove his intent, can never after be admitted the combat upon that quarrel." On Honour and honourable quarrels, 4to. 1595. This passage fully supports the emendation here made, and my interpretation of the words. The quartos read—From sun to sun. The emendation, which in my apprehension requires no enforcement or support, was proposed by Mr. Steevens, who explains these words differently. He is of opinion that they mean, from ear day to ear day. MALONE.

However ingenious the conjecture of Mr. Steevens may be, I think the old reading the true one. From sun to sun, is from one denial to another; for those denials were severally maintained to be lies. HENLEY.

AUM. Who sets me else? by heaven, I'll throw at all:

I have a thousand spirits in one breast,⁴

To answer twenty thousand such as you.

SURRY. My lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

FITZ. My lord, 'tis true: you were in presence then;⁵
And you can witness with me, this is true.

SURRY. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is true.

FITZ. Surry, thou liest:

SURRY. Dishonourable boy!

That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,

That it shall render vengeance and revenge,

Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie, do lie.

In earth as quiet as thy father's scull.

In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn;

Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

FITZ. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse!

If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,

I dare meet Surry in a wilderness,⁶

And spit upon him, whilst I say, he lies,

And lies, and lies: there is my bond of faith,

To tie thee to my strong correction.—

As I intend to thrive in this new world,⁷

⁴ I have a thousand spirits in one breast.] So, in K. Richard III.:

"A thousand hearts are great within my bosom." STEEVENS:

⁵ My lord, 'tis true: you were in presence then.] The quartos omit—My lord, and read—'Tis very true, &c. The folio preserves both readings, and consequently overloads the metre. STEEVENS.

⁶ I dare meet Surry in a wilderness.] I dare meet him where no help can be had by me against him. So, in Macbeth:

"—or be alive again,

"And dare me to the desert with thy sword." JOHNSON.

⁷ —in this new world.] In this world where I have just begun to be an ador. Surry has, a few lines above, called him boy.

JOHNSON.

Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal:
 Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say,
 That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men
 To execute the noble duke at Calais.

AUM. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage,
 That a Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this,^a
 If he may be repeal'd to try his honour.

BOLING. These differences shall all rest under gage,
 Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be,
 And, though mine enemy, restor'd again
 To all his land and signories; when he's return'd,
 Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial.

CAR. That honourable day shall ne'er be seen.—
 Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
 For Jesu Christ; in glorious Christian field
 Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross,
 Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens:
 And, toil'd with works of war, retir'd himself
 To Italy; and there, at Venice, gave
 His body to that pleasant country's earth,
 And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
 Under whose colours he had fought so long.

BOLING. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?

CAR. As sure as I live, my lord.

BOLING. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom
 Of good old Abraham!—Lords appellants,
 Your differences shall all rest under gage,
 Till we assign you to your days of trial.

^a — here do I throw down this,] Holinshed says, that on this occasion "he threw a hood that he had borrowed,"

STEVENS.

He had before thrown down his own hood, when accused by Bagot. MALONE.

Enter YORK, attended.

YORK. Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high scepter yields
To the possession of thy royal hand:
Ascend his throne, descending now from him, —
And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!

BOLING. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

CAR. Marry, God forbid! —
Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best befitting me to speak the truth,¹
Would God, that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard; then true nobles² would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here, that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judg'd, but they are hy to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them:
And shall the figure of God's majesty,³

¹ Yet best befitting me to speak the truth.] It might be read more grammatically:

Yet best befits it me to speak the truth.

But I do not think it is printed otherwise than as Shakspeare wrote it. JOHNSON.

² — nobles —] i. e. nobleness; a word now obsolete, but used both by Spenser and Ben Jonson. STEEVENS.

³ And shall the figure, &c.] Here is another proof that our author did not learn in King James's court his elevated notions of the right of kings. I know not any flatterer of the Stuarts, who has expressed this doctrine in much stronger terms. It must be observed that the poet intends, from the beginning to the end, to exhibit this bishop as brave, pious, and venerable. JOHNSON.

Shakspeare has represented the character of the bishop as he found it in Holinshed, where this famous speech, (which contains

His captain, steward, deputy elect,
 Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
 Be judg'd by subject and inferior breath,
 And he himself not present? O, forbid it, God,
 That, in a Christian climate, souls refin'd
 Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed!
 I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
 Stirr'd up by heaven thus boldly for his king,
 My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
 Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:
 And if you crown him, let me prophecy.—
 The blood of English shall manure the ground,
 And future ages groan for this foul act;
 Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
 And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars
 Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound;
 Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
 Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd in the most express terms, the doctrine of passive obedience,} is preserved. The politics of the historian were the politics of the poet. STEEVENS.

The chief argument urged by the bishop in Holinshed, is, that it was unjust to proceed against the king "without calling him openly to his answer and defence." He says, that "none of them were worthy or meete to give judgement to so noble a prince;" but does not expressly assert that he could not be lawfully deposed. Our author, however, undoubtedly had Holinshed before him. MALONE.

It does not appear from any better authority than Holinshed that Bishop Merkes made this famous speech, or any speech at all upon this occasion, or even that he was present at the time. His sentiments, however, whether right or wrong, would have been regarded neither as novel nor unconstitutional. And it is observable that usurpers are as ready to avail themselves of the doctrine of divine right, as lawful sovereigns to dwell upon the sanctity of their persons and the sanctity of their class. Even that "cutpurse of the empire," Claudius, in Hamlet, affects to believe that "—such divinity doth hedge a king," &c. RITSON.

The field of Golgatha and dead men's skulls,
 O, if you rear this house against this house,
 It will the wofullest division prove,
 That ever fell upon this cursed earth:
 Prevent, resist it, let it not be so,
 Lest child, child's children,³ cry against you—woe!

NORTH. Well have you argu'd, sir; and, for your pains,

Of capital treason we arrest you here:—
 My lord of Westminster, be it your charge
 To keep him safely till his day of trial.⁴—
 May't please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit?

BOLING. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view

He may surrender; so we shall proceed
 Without suspicion.

YORK. I will be his conduct.⁵ [Exit.

³ Lest child, child's children;] Thus the old copy. Some of our modern editors read—children's children. STEEVENS.

⁴ — His day of trial.] After this line, whatever follows, almost to the end of the act, containing the whole process of dethroning and debasing King Richard, was added after the first edition, of 1598, and before the second of 1613. Part of the addition is proper, and part might have been so borne without much loss. The author, I suppose, intended to make a very moving scene.

JOHNSON,

The addition was first made in the quarto 1608.

STEEVENS.

The first edition was in 1597, not in 1598. When it is said that this scene was added, the reader must understand that it was added by the printer, or that a more perfect copy fell into the hands of the later editor than was published by a former. There is no proof that the whole scene was not written by Shakespeare at the same time with the rest of the play, though for political reasons it might not have been exhibited or printed during the life of Queen Elizabeth. See An Attempt to ascertain the order of his plays, Vol. II. MALONE.

⁵ — His conduct.] i. e. conductor. So, in K. Henry VI. P. II:

"Although thou hast been conduct of my shame." STEEVENS.

BOLING. Lords, you that are here under our arteft,
Procure your fureties for your days of answer: —
Little are we beholden to your love, [To CARLISLE.
And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter YORK, with King RICHARD, and Officers bearing the crown, &c.

K. RICH. Alack, why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee: —
Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I will remember
The favours of these men:⁶ Were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me?
So Judas did to Christ: but he, in twelve,
Found truth in all, but one; I, in twelve thousand,
none.

God save the king! — Will no man say, amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen.
God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me. —
To do what service am I sent for hither?

YORK. To do that office, of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer, —
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke.

K. RICH. Give me the crown: — Here, cousin, seize the crown;
Here, on this side,⁷ my hand; on that side, thine.

⁶ The favours, &c.] The countenances: the features. JOHNSON.
So, in Othello:

“ — nor should I know him, —

“ Were he in favour as in humour alter'd.” STEEVENS.

⁷ Here, on this side,] The old copy redundantly has — Here, cousin, on this side, —. STEEVENS.

Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets filling one another ;
The emptier ever dancing² in the air,
The other down, unseen and full of water:
That bucket down, and full of tears, am I,
Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

BOLING. I thought, you had been willing to resign.

K. RICH. My crown, I am ; but still my griefs are mine :

You may my glories and my state depose,
But not my griefs ; still am I king of those.

BOLING. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. RICH. Your cares set up, do not pluck my cares down.

My care is — loss of care, by old care done ;³

Your care is — gain of care, by new care won :

The cares I give, I have, though given away ;

They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

BOLING. Are you contented to resign the crown?

K. RICH. Ay, no ; — no, ay ; — for I must nothing
he ;

Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.

Now mark me how I will undo myself : —

I give this heavy weight from off my head,

And this unwieldy scepter from my hand,

² The emptier ever dancing —] This is a comparison not easily accommodated to the subject, nor very naturally introduced. The best part is this line, in which he makes the usurper the empty bucket. JOHNSON.

³ My care is — loss of care, by old care done ;] Shakspeare often obscures his meaning by playing with sounds. Richard seems to say here, that his cares are not made less by the increase of Bolingbroke's cares ; for this reason, that his care is the loss of care, — his grief is, that his regal cares are at an end, by the cessation of the care to which he had been accustomed. JOHNSON.

The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;
 With mine own tears I wash away my halm,^a
 With mine own hands I give away my crown,
 With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
 With mine own breath release all duteous oaths:
 All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
 My manors, rents, revenues, I forego;
 My acts, decrees, and statutes, deny:
 God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me!
 God keep all vows unhroke, are made to thee!
 Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd;
 And thou with all pleas'd, that all achiev'd!
 Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
 And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit!
 God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
 And send him many years of sunshine days! —
 What more remains?

NORTH.

No more, hut that you read

[Offering a paper.

These accusations, and these grievous crimes,
 Committed by your person, and your followers,
 Against the state and profit of this land;
 That, by confessing them, the souls of men
 May deem that you are worthily depos'd.

K. RICH. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
 My weav'd-up follies? Gentle Northumberland,
 If thy offences were upon record,
 Would it not shame thee, in so fair a troop,
 To read a lecture of them? If thou would'st,^a
 There should'st thou find one heinous article, —
 Containing the deposing of a king,
 And cracking the strong warrant of an oath, —

^a — my halm,] The oil of consecration. He has mentioned it before. JOHNSON.

^b — If thou would'st,] That is, if thou would'st read over a list of thy own deeds. JOHNSON.

Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven:—
 Nay, all of you, that stand and look upon me,
 Whilst that my wretchedness doth bait myself, —
 Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands,
 Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates
 Have here deliver'd me to my four crosses,
 And water cannot wash away your sin.

NORTH. My lord, despatch; read o'er these articles.

K. RICH. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:
 And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
 But they can see a fort³ of traitors here.
 Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
 I find myself a traitor with the rest:
 For I have given here my soul's consent,
 To undeck the pompous hody of a king;
 Make glory base; and sovereignty, a slave;
 Proud majesty, a subject; state, a peasant.

NORTH. My lord, —

K. RICH. No lord of thine, thou haught, ⁴insulting man,
 Nor no man's lord; I have no name, no title, —
 No, not that name was given me at the font, ⁵ —
 But 'tis usurp'd: — Alack the heavy day,
 That I have worn so many winters out,
 And know not now what name to call myself!

³ — a fort — A pack, a company. WARRINGTON.
 So, in King Richard III:

"A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and runaways." STEEVENS.

⁴ — haught,] i. e. haughty. So, in K. Richard III:

"And the queen's sons and brothers, haught and proud."
 STEEVENS.

⁵ No, not that name was given me at the font,] How that name which was given him at the font could be usurped, I do not understand. Perhaps Shakspeare meant to shew that imagination, dwelling long on its own misfortunes, represents them as greater than they really are. ANONYMOUS.

O, that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
To melt myself away in water-drops!—
Good king,—great king,—(and yet not greatly good.)

An if my word he sterling yet in England,
Let it command a mirror hither straight;
That it may show me what a face I have,
Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.

BOLING. Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass. [Exit an Attendant.

NORTH. Read o'er this paper, while the glaſs doth come.

K. RICH. Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come to hell.

BOLING. Urge it no more, my lord Northumberland.

NORTH. The commons will not then be satisfied.

K. RICH. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
When I do see the very book indeed
Where all my sins are writ,⁶ and that's—myself.

Re-enter Attendant, with a glass.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read.—
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds?—O, flattering glass,
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost beguile me! Was this face the face,
That every day under his household roof

⁶ ——— the very book indeed

Where all my kins are writ,] This phrase is from the 135th Psalm, v. 15 : " — and in thy book where all my members written."

STRAVINSKY.

Did keep ten thousand men? ⁶ Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Was this the face, that faced so many follies,
And was at last outfaced by Bolingbroke?
A brittle glory shineth in this face:
As brittle as the glory is the face;

[Dashes the glass against the ground.]

For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers —
Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport. —
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

BOLING. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd

The shadow of your face.

K. RICH. Say that again.

The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see: —

'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,
For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st
Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?

BOLING. Name it, fair cousin.

K. RICH. Fair cousin? Why, I am greater than a
king:

⁶ Did keep ten thousand men?] Shakespeare is here not quite accurate. Our old chronicles only say "that to his household came every day, to meine, ten thousand men." MALONE.

⁷ — my grief lies all within;

And these external manners of lament &c.] So, in Hamlet:

"But I have that within which passeth show;

"These but the trappings and the suits of woe." MALONE.

For, when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.

Being so great, I have no need to beg.

BOLING. Yet ask.

K. RICH. And shall I have?

BOLING. You shall.

K. RICH. Then give me leave to go.

BOLING. Whither?

K. RICH. Whither you will, so I were from your fights.

BOLING. Go some of you, convey him to the Tower.

K. RICH. O, good! Convey?—Conveyers are you all,²

That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall.³

[Exeunt K. RICHARD, some Lords, and a guard.]

BOLING. On Wednesday next, we solemnly set down

Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.⁴

[Exeunt all but the Abbot, bishop of Carlisle, and AUMERLE.]

² — Conveyers are you all,] To convey is a term often used in an ill sense, and so Richard understands it here. Pistol says of flouring, convey the wife it sells; and so convey is the word for sleight of hand, which seems to be alluded to here. Ye are all, says the deposed prince, jugglers, who rise with this nimble dexterity by the fall of a good king. JOHNSON.

³ — a true king's fall,] This is the last of the additional lines which were first printed in the quarto, 1608. MALONE.

⁴ On Wednesday next, we solemnly set down
Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.] The two first quartos, read:

"Let it be so: and be on Wednesday next

"We solemnly proclaim our coronation:

"Lords, be ready all." STEEVENS.

ABBOT. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.

CAR. The woe's to come; the children yet unborn Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.*

AUM. You holy clergymen, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?

ABBOT. Before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament
To bury³ mine intents, but to effect⁴
Whatever I shall happen to devise:—
I see, your brows are full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears;
Come home with me to supper; I will lay
A plot, shall show us all a merry day.⁵ [Exeunt.

* — as sharp to them as thorn. } This pathetic denunciation shows that Shakspeare intended to impress his auditors with dislike of the depofal of Richard. JOHNSON.

³ To bury—] To conceal, to keep secret. JOHNSON.

So, in Every Man in his Humour, by Ben Jonson:

"Lock'd up in silence, midnight, buried here."

STEVENS.

⁴ — but to effect —] The old copies redundantly read — but also to effect. STEVENS.

⁵ In the first edition there is no personal appearance of King Richard, so that all to the line at which he leaves the stage was inserted afterwards. JOHNSON.

ACT V. SCENE I.

London. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter Queen, and Ladies.

QUEEN. This way the king will come; this is the way
To Julius Cæsar's ill-erected tower,⁶
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke:
Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.⁷

Enter King RICHARD, and guards.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose wither: Yet look up; behold;
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.—
Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand;⁸

⁶ To Julius Cæsar's ill-erected tower. } The Tower of London is traditionally said to have been the work of Julius Cæsar. JOHNSON.
By—ill-erected, I suppose, is meant—erected for bad purposes.

STEEVENS.

⁷ Here let us rest, if &c. } So, Milton:

"Here rest, if any rest can harbour here." JOHNSON.

And Browne, in his Beltaine's Pastoral, B. II. Song iii. 1613:

"—Night and day upon the hard'ned stones

"Rests, if a rest can be—" &c. HOLT WHITE.

⁸ Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand; } The queen uses comparative terms absolutely. Instead of saying, Thou who appear'st as the ground on which the magnificence of Troy was once erected, she says—

Ah, thou the model &c.

This map of honour:—

Thou picture of greatness. JOHNSON.

Model, it has already been observed, is used by our author, for a thing made after a pattern. He is, I believe, singular in this use.

Thou map of honour; thou king Richard's tomb,
And not king Richard; thou most beauteous inn,²
Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alchouse guest?

K. RICH. Join not with grief,³ fair woman, do not so,

To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul,
To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awak'd, the truth of what we are
Shows us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity;⁴ and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France,
And cloister thee in some religious house:
Our holy lives must win a new world's crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken down.

QUEEN. What, is my Richard both in shape and mind

Transform'd, and weakened; Hath Bolingbroke of the word. Thou ruined majesty, says the queen, that resemblest the desolated waste where Troy once stood. So before:

"Who was the model of thy father's life."

In our author's Rape of Lucrece, Sleep is called "the map of death."

MALONE.

² — beauteous inn.] Inn does not here signify a house of publick entertainment; but a dignified habitation. Lord Howard's magnificent seat in Essex is still called Audley-lan. STEEVENS.

I cannot agree with Steevens. Lan means a house of entertainment, and is opposed to alchouse in the following line. M. MASON.

³ Join not with grief.] Do not thou unite with grief against me; do not, by thy additional sorrows, enable grief to strike me down at once. My own part of sorrow I can bear, but thy affliction will immediately destroy me. JOHNSON.

⁴ — I am sworn brother. —

To grim necessity.] I have reconciled myself to necessity, I am in a state of amity with the constraint which I have sustained. JOHNSON.

The expression sworn brother, alludes to the fratres jurati, who, in the age of chivalry, bound themselves by mutual oaths, to share fortunes together. See Mr. Whalley's note on K. Henry V.
Act II. sc. i. STEEVENS.

Depos'd thine intellect? hath he been in thy heart?
 The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw,
 And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
 To be o'erpower'd; and wilt thou, pupil like,
 Take thy correction mildly? kifs the rod;
 And sawn on rage with base humility,
 Which art a lion, and a king of beasts?

K. RICH. A king of beasts, indeed; if aught but beasts,

I had been still a happy king of men.⁴
 Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France:
 Think, I am dead; and that even here thou tak'st,
 As from my death-bed, my last living leave.
 In winter's tedious nights, sit by the fire
 With good old folks; and let them tell thee tales
 Of woeful ages, long ago betid:
 And, ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief,⁵
 Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,⁶
 And send the hearers weeping to their beds.
 For why,⁷ the senseless brands will sympathize

⁴ — king of men.] The marvellous, that Mr. Upton did not quote this passage as an evidence of our author's learning, and observe, that a more faithful translation of Homer's ἀνὰ δρόμον could not have been made. STEVENS.

⁵ — to quit their grief.] To retaliate their mournful stories; JOHNSON.

⁶ Tell thou the lamentable fall of me.] Thus the folio. So, in K. Henry VIII.:

"And when you would say something that is sad,
 "Speak how I fell."

The reading, however, of the first quarto, 1597, is also much in our author's manner:

Tell thou the lamentable tale of me. — MALONE.

⁷ For why.] The poet should have ended this speech with the foregoing line, and have spared his childish prattle about the fire.

JOHNSON.

This is certainly childish prattle, as Johnson calls it; but it is of the same stamp with the other speeches of Richard, after the landing of Bolingbroke, which are a strange medley of sense and puerility. M. MASON.

The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
 And, in compassion, weep the fire out:
 And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
 For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, attended.

NORTH My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang'd ;
 You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—
 And, madam, there is order ta'en for you ;
 With all swift speed you must away to France.

K. RICH. Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal

The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,
 The time shall not be many hours of age
 More than it is, ere foul sin, gathering head,
 Shall break into corruption: thou shalt think,
 Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,
 It is too little, helping him to all ;
 And he shall think,⁴ that thou, which know'st the way
 To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,
 Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way
 To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne,
 The love of wicked friends converts to fear ;
 That fear, to hate ; and hate turns one, or both,
 To worthy danger, and deserved death.

NORTH. My guilt upon my head, and there an end,
 Take leave, and part ; for you must part forthwith.

K. RICH. Doubtly divorc'd ?—Bad men, ye violate
 A twofold marriage ; 'twixt my crown and me ;
 And then, betwixt me and my married wife.—

⁴ And he shall think,] The conjunction — And, without which the metre is deficient, was supplied by Mr. Rowe. STEEVENS.

Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me;
 And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made.⁵—
 Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north,
 Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime;
 My wife to France; from whence, set forth in pomp,
 She came adorned hither like sweet May,
 Sent back like Hallowmas,⁶ or short'st of day.

QUEEN. And must we be divided? must we part?

K. RICH. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

QUEEN. Banish us both, and send the king with me.

NORTH. That were some love, but little policy.⁷

QUEEN. Then whither he goes, thither let me go.⁸

K. RICH. So two, together weeping, make one woe.
 Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;
 Better far off, than—near, be ne'er the near'.⁹

⁵ *Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me
 And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made.*] A kiss appears to have been an established circumstance in our ancient nuptial ceremony. So, in Marston's Insatiate Countess, 1613, the Duke, on parting with his wife, says to her:

"The kiss thou gav'st me in the church, here take." STEEVENS.

⁶ — Hallowmas,] All-hallows, or all-hallowtide; the first of November. STEEVENS.

⁷ That were some love, &c.] The quartos give this speech to the king. STEEVENS.

⁸ Then whither he goes, thither let me go.] So, in the Book of Ruth, i. 16: "—for whither thou goest, I will go." STEEVENS.

⁹ Better far off, than—near, be ne'er the near'.] To be never the nearer, or, as it is commonly spoken in the midland counties, ne'er the n'r, is, to make no advance towards the good desired. JOHNSON.

So, in The Legend of Shorn's wife, by Thomas Churchyard, Mirror for Magistrates, 1578:

"Compel the hawk to sit, that is unmann'd,

"Or make the hound untaught to draw the deere,

"Or bring the free against his will in hand,

"Or move the sad a pleasant tale to hear,

"Your time is lost, and you are near the near."

Go, count thy way with sighs; I mine with groans.

QUEEN. So longest way shall have the longest moans.

K. RICH. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short,

And piece the way out with a heavy heart.

Come, come, in wooing sorrow let's be brief,

Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.

One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part;

Thus give I mine, and thus I take thy heart.

[They kiss.]

QUEEN. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part,

To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart.

[Kiss again.]

So, now I have mine own again, begone,

That I may strive to kill it with a groan.

K. RICH. We make woe wanton with this fond delay:

Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

The same. A Room in the Duke of York's Palace.

Enter YORK, and his Duchefs.

DUCH. My lord, you told me, you would tell the rest.
When weeping made you break the story off
Of our two cousins coming into London.

The meaning is, it is better to be at a great distance, than being near each other, to find that we yet are not likely to be peaceably and happily united. MALONE.

* ——— and kill thy heart. } So, in our author's Venus and Adonis :
" ——— they have murder'd this poor heart of mine." MALONE.

Again, in K. Henry V. Act II. sc. i : " ——— he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days : the king hath kill'd his heart."

STEEVENS.

YORK. Where did I leave?

DUCH. At that sad stop, my lord,
Where rude misgovern'd hands, from windows' tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head.

YORK. Then, 'as I said, the duke, great Boling-broke,—

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,—
With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course, While all tongues cried—God save thee, Boling-broke!

You would have thought the very windows spake,
So many greedy looks of young and old
Through casements darted their desiring eyes
Upon his visage; and that all the walls,
With painted imag'ry, had said at once,³—
Jesu preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!
Whilst he, from one side to the other turning,
Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,
Bespake them thus,—I thank you, countrymen:
And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

DUCH. Alas, poor Richard! where rides he the while?

YORK. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent⁴ on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious:
Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes

³ With painted imag'ry, had said at once.] Our author probably was thinking of the painted clothes that were hung in the streets, in the pageants that were exhibited in his own time; in which the figures sometimes had labels issuing from their mouths, containing sentences of gratulation. MALONE.

⁴ Are idly bent.—] That is, carelessly turned, thrown without attention. This the poet learned by his attendance and practice on the stage. JOHNSON.

Did scowl on Richard; no man cried, God save
him;

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home:
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head;
Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,—
His face still combating with tears and smiles,
The badges of his grief and patience,⁵—
That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd
The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,
And barbarism itself have pitied him.
But heaven hath a hand in these events;
To whose high will we bound our calm contents.
To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,
Whose state and honour I for aye allow.

⁵ *His face still combating with tears and smiles,
The badges of his grief and patience,*] There is, I believe, no image, which our poet more delighted in than this. So, in a former scene of this play:

"As a long-parted mother with her child,
"Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting."

Again, in K. Lear:

"Patience and sorrow strove
"Who should express her goodlikeness:
"—— her smiles and tears
"Were like a better May."

Again, in Cymbeline:

"—— nobly he yokes
"A smiling with a frow."

Again, in Macbeth:

"My plenteous joys,
"Wanton in fullness, seek to hide themselves
"In drops of sorrow."

Again, in Coriolanus:

"Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles."

Again, in The Tempest:

"—— I am a fool
"To weep at what I am glad of."

So also, Drayton in his Mortimeriades, 4to. 1596:

"With thy sweetest kisses to them both beguile,
"Untill they smiling weep, and weeping smile."

MALONE.

Enter AUMERLE.

DUCH. Here comes my son Aumerle.

YORK. Aumerle that was;⁶
But that is lost, for being Richard's friend,
And, madam, you must call him Rutland now:
I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king.

DUCH. Welcome, my son: Who are the violets now,
That strew the green lap of the new-come spring?⁷

AUM. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not:
God knows, I had as lief be none, as one.

YORK. Well, bear you well⁸ in this new spring of time,
Lest you be cropp'd before you come to prime.
What news from Oxford? hold those jousts and triumphs?⁹

AUM. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

YORK. You will be there, I know.

AUM. If God prevent it not; I purpose so.

⁶ Aumerle that was;] The Dukes of Aumerle, Surrey, and Exeter, were by an act of Henry's first parliament deprived of their dukedoms, but were allowed to retain their earldoms of Rutland, Kent, and Huntingdon. Holingshed, p. 513, 514.

STEEVENS.

⁷ That strew the green lap of the new-come spring? So, in Milton's Song on May Morning:

" — who from her green lap throws

" The yellow cowslip, and the pale primrose." STEEVENS.

⁸ — bear you well —] That is, conduct yourself with prudence. JOHNSON.

⁹ — jousts and triumphs? Triumphs are Shewes, such as Masques, Revels, &c.

So, in the Third Part of K. Henry VI. Act V. Sc. vii:

" And now what rests, but that we spend the time

" With stately triumphs, mirthful comick shows,

" Such as best fit the pleasures of the court?" STEEVENS.

YORK. What seal is that, that hangs without thy bosom?²

Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.³

AUM. My lord, 'tis nothing.

YORK. No matter then who sees it:
I will be satisfied, let me see the writing.

AUM. I do beseech your grace to pardon me;
It is a matter of small consequence,
Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

YORK. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.
I fear, I fear,—

DUCH. What should you fear;
'Tis nothing but some bond, that he is enter'd into
For gay apparel, 'gainst the triumph day.

YORK. Bound to himself? what doth he with a bond
That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.
Boy, let me see the writing.

AUM. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not show it.

YORK. I will be satisfied; let me see it, I say, [Snatches it, and reads.]

Treason! foul treason! villain! traitor! slave!

DUCH. What is the matter, my lord?

YORK. Ho! who is within there? [Enter a Servant.]
Saddle my horse.
God for his mercy! what treachery is here!

² What seal is that, that hangs without thy bosom?] The seals of deeds were formerly impressed on Bips or labels of parchment, appendant to them. MALONE.

³ Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.] Such harsh and defective lines as this, are probably corrupt, and might be easily supplied, but that it would be dangerous to let conjecture loose on such slight occasions. JOHNSON.

Perhaps Shakspeare wrote — Boy, let me see the writing. York uses these words a little lower. MALONE.

DUCH. Why, what is it, my lord?

YORK. Give me my hoots, I say; saddle my horse:

Now by mine honour, by my life, my troth,
I will appeach the villain. [Exit Servant.]

DUCH. What's the matter?

YORK. Peace, foolish woman.

DUCH. I will not peace: What is the matter, son?

AUM. Good mother, be content; it is no more Than my poor life must answer.

DUCH. Thy life answer!

Re-enter Servant, with boots.

YORK. Bring me my boots, I will unto the king.

DUCH. Strike him, Aumerle. Poor boy, thou art amaz'd:⁴

Hence, villain; never more come in my sight.
[To the Servant.]

YORK. Give me my hoots, I say.

DUCH. Why, York, what wilt thou do?
Wilt thou not hide the trespasss of thine own?
Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time?
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age,
And rob me of a happy mother's name?
Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?

⁴ ——— amaz'd] i. e. perplexed, confounded. So, in The Merry Wives of Windsor: "That cannot choose but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked." STEEVENS.

YORK. Thou fond mad woman.
Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?
A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,
And interchangeably set down their hands,
To kill the king at Oxford.⁴

DUCH. He shall be none;
We'll keep him here: Then what is that to him?

YORK. Away,
Fond woman! were he twenty times my son,
I would appeach him.

DUCH. Hadst thou groan'd for him,
As I have done, thou'dst be more pitiful.
But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect,
That I have been disloyal to thy bed,
And that he is a bastard, not thy son:
Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind:
He is as like thee as a man may be,
Not like to me, or any of my kin,
And yet I love him.

YORK. Make way, unruly woman. [Exit.]

DUCH. After, Aumerle; mount thee upon his horse;
Spur, post; and get before him to the king,
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.
I'll not be long behind; though I be old,

⁴ To kill the King at Oxford] That the dukes of Exeter and Surry, and the Earl of Salisbury entered into a conspiracy for this purpose is unquestionable; but Hall's narrative, copied by Holinshed and Sir John Hayward, is by no means to be depended upon. Aumerle, in particular, is not charged by any contemporary writer, unless it be the writer of a romance, as having the least concern in it. See a "Requiem to the Conspirators," in A Collection of Ancient Songs, lately published, where may be found an authentic account of the plot from writers of authority. Rawson.

This ballad was written, not on the conspiracy against Henry IV. but on the death of William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, who was taken and beheaded by the captain of a ship called Nicholas of the Tower, in May, 1450, when it appears to have been

Scene 1. North. 1591

*O! how quiet Virginia lay the gentle babe;
 Thus, thus quiet Yorrick, smiling and asleep;
 O! how their alabaster cheeks were
 Their lips were four red roses on a dial;
 Which in their summer beauty light each other
 A kind of purple on their father's lips.*

SHAKESPEARE.

King Richard the Third

ACT. IV. SCEN. III.

*Which ever you have, almost changed my mind
 Albeit the deed, sure the which I had
 When Virginia then told me, we understood
 The most splendid jewel work of nature;
 That from the purple crown on the front.*

I doubt not but to ride as fast as York:
 And never will I rise up from the ground,
 Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee: Away;
 Begone. [Exeunt.

S C E N E III.

* Windfor. A Room in the Castle.

Enter BOLINGBROKE as King; PERCY, and other Lords.

BOLING. Can no man tell of my unthrifty son?
 'Tis full three months, since I did see him last: —
 If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.
 I would to God, My lords, he might be found:
 Enquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,⁵
 For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
 With unrestrained loose companions;
 Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
 And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;
 While he,⁶ young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
 Takes on the point of honour, to support
 So dissolute a crew.

PERCY. My lord, some two days since I saw the prince;
 And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.

composed, and is consequently to be regarded as a satire upon the ministers or court party of that time.

ANONYMOUS.

⁵ Enquire at London, &c.] This is a very proper introduction to the future character of Henry the Fifth, to his debaucheries in his youth, and his greatness in his manhood. JOHNSON.

Shakspeare seldom attended to chronology. The prince was at this time but twelve years old; for he was born in 1388, and the conspiracy on which the present scene is formed, was discovered in the beginning of the year 1400. — He scarcely frequented taverns or flew at so early an age. MALONE.

⁶ While &c.] All the old copies read — Which he. STEEVENS.
 The correction was made by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

VOL. XII,

L

BOLING. And what said the gallant?

PERCY. His answer was, — he would unto the fews;

And from the common'st creature pluck a glove,⁷
And wear it as a favour; and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.

BOLING. As dissolute, as desperate: yet, through both

I see some sparkles of a better hope,⁸
Which elder days may happily bring forth.
But who comes here?

Enter AUMERLE, hastily.

AUM. Where is the king?

BOLING. What means
Our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly?

AUM. God save your grace. I do beseech your majesty,

To have some conference with your grace alone.

BOLING. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone. — [Exeunt PERCY and Lords.]

What is the matter with our cousin now?

⁷ — pluck a glove,] So, in Promos and Cassander, 1578, Lamia, the strumpet, says:

"Who loves me once is lymed to my heart:

"My colour some, and some shall wear my glove."

Again, in The Schemer's Holiday, or Gentle Craft, 1600:

"Or shall I undertake some martial sport

"Wearing your glove at russey or at tilt,

"And tell how many gallants I unhors'd?" STEEVENS.

⁸ I see some sparkles of a better hope,] The folio reads:

— sparks of better hope.

The quarto, 1615:

— sparkles of better hope. STEEVENS.

The first quarto has — sparkles of better hope. The article was inserted by Mr. Steevens. MALONE.

AUM. For ever may my knees grow to the earth,
[Kneels.]

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,
Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.

BOLING. Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but^a the first, how heinous ere it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.

AUM. Then give me leave that I may turn the key,
That no man enter till my tale be done.

BOLING. Have thy desire.

[AUMERLE locks the door.]

YORK. [Within.] My liege, beware; look to thyself;

Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

BOLING. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing.]

AUM. Stay thy revengeful hand;

Thou hast no cause to fear.

YORK. [Within.] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy king:

Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face?

Open the door, or I will break it open.

[BOLINGBROKE opens the door.]

Enter YORK.

BOLING. What is the matter, uncle? speak;
Recover breath; tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.

YORK. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know

The treason that my haste forbids me show.

AUM. Remember as thou read'st, thy promise past:

^a If but — } Old copies — If so. Corrected by Mr. Pope.
MALONE,

I do repent me; read not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

YORK. 'Twas, villain, ere thy hand did set it down. —

I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king;
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence:
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

BOLING. O heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy! —

O loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou sheer, immaculate,³ and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through muddy passages,
Hath held his current, and defil'd himself!
Thy overflow of good converts to bad;⁴
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.⁵

³ Thou sheer, immaculate, &c.] Sheer is pellucid, transparent. Some of the modern editors arbitrarily read clear. So, in Spenser's Fairy Queen, B. III. c. ii:

"Who having viewed in a fountain sheer

"Her face," &c.

Again, B. III. c. xi;

"That she at last came to a fountain sheer."

Again, in the Fourth Book of Golding's Translation of Ovid's Metamorphosis, 1587:

"The water was so pure and sheere," &c.

Transparent muslin is still called sheer muslin. STEVENS.

⁴ Thy overflow of good converts to bad;] Mr. Theobald would read:
— converts the bad. STEVENS.

The old reading — converts to bad, is right, I believe, though Mr. Theobald did not understand it. "The overflow of good in thee is turned to bad in thy son; and that same abundant goodness in thee shall excuse his transgression." TYRWHITT.

⁵ — digressing son,] Thus the old copies, and rightly. So, in Romeo and Juliet:

"Digressing from the valour of a man."

To digress is to deviate from what is right or regular. Some of the modern editors read: — transgressing. STEVENS.

YORK. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd;
 And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,
 As thrifless sons their scraping fathers' gold.
 Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies,
 Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies:
 Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him breath,
 The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

DUCH. [Within.] What ho, my liege! for God's sake, let me in.

BOLING. What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this eager cry?

DUCH. A woman, and thine aunt, great king;
 'tis I.

Speak with me, pity me, open the door;
 A beggar begs, that never begg'd before.

BOLING. Our scene is alter'd, — from a serious thing.

And now chang'd to The Beggar and the King.⁴ —

My dangerous cousin, let your mother in;
 I know, she's come to pray for your soul sin.

YORK. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,
 More sins, for this forgiveness, prosper may.
 This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rests sound;
 This, let alone, will all the rest confound.

⁴ — the Beggar and the King.] The King and the Beggar seems to have been an interlude well known in the time of our author, who has alluded to it more than once. I cannot now find that any copy of it is left. JOHNSON.

The King and Beggar was perhaps once an interlude; it was certainly a song. The reader will find it in the first volume of Dr. Percy's collection. It is there entitled, King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid; and is printed from Rich. Johnson's Crown Garland of Gaudin Ruffs, 1619, 12mo; where it is entitled simply, A song of a Beggar and a King. This interlude or ballad is mentioned in Cynthia's Revels, 1613:

" Prinke thy sharp Melpomene to sing

" The story of a Beggar and the King." STEVENS.

Enter Ducheſs.

DUCH. O king, believe not this hard-hearted man;

Love, loving not itſelf, none other can.

YORK. Thou frantick woman, what doſt thou make here?⁵

Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear?

DUCH. Sweet York, be patient: Hear me, gentle liege. [Kneels.

BOLING. Riſe up, good aunt.

DUCH. Not yet, I thee beſeech:
For ever will I kneel upon my knees,⁶
And never ſee day that the happy ſees,
Till thou give joy! until thou bid me joy,
By pardoning Rutland, my tranſgreſſing boy.

AUM. Unto my mother's prayers, I bend my knee. [Kneels.

YORK. Againſt them both, my true joints bended be. [Kneels.

Ill may'ſt thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!⁷

DUCH. Pleads he in earneſt? look upon his face;
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jeſt;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breſt:

⁵ Thou frantick woman, what doſt thou make here?] So, in The Merry Wives of Windsor:

"What make you here?"

Again, in Othello:

"Ancient, what makes he here." MALONE.

⁶ — kneel upon my knees,] Thus the folio. The quartos read:

— walk upon my knees. STEEVENS.

Ill may'ſt thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!] This line is not in the folio. MALONE.

He prays but faintly, and would be denied;
 We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside;
 His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
 Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow;
 His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
 Ours, of true zeal and deep integrity.
 Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have
 That mercy, which true prayers ought to have.

BOLING. Good aunt, stand up.

DUCH. Nay, do not say—stand up;
 But, pardon, first; and afterwards, stand up,
 As if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
 Pardon—should be the first word of thy speech.
 I never long'd to hear a word till now;
 Say—pardon, king; let pity teach thee how:
 The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
 No word like, pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.

YORK. Speak it in French, king; say, pardonnez moy.^{*}

DUCH. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?

Ab, my four husband, my hard-hearted lord,
 That set'st the word itself against the word!—
 Speak, pardon, as 'tis current in our land;
 The chopping French[†] we do not understand.

^{*} ——— pardonnez moy. } That is, excuse me, a phrase used when any thing is civilly denied. The whole passage is such as I could well wish away. JOHNSON.

[†] The chopping French —] Chopping. I suppose, here means jangling, talking slipshodly a language unintelligible to Englishmen; or perhaps it may mean, — the French, who clip and mutilate their words. I do not remember to have met the word, in this sense, in any other place. In the universities they talk of chopping logic, and our author in Romeo and Juliet has the same phrase;

"How now! how now! chop logic?" MATONE.

Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there :
Or, in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear ;
That, hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,

Pity may move thee pardon to rehearse.

BOLING. Good aunt, stand up,

DUCH. I do not sue to stand,

Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.

BOLING. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me,

DUCH. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee !

Yer am I sick for fear: speak it again;

Twice saying pardon, doth not pardon twain,

Bur makes oue pardon strong.

BOLING.

With all my heart

I pardon him.*

DUCH. A god on earth thou art.³

BOLING. But for our truly brother-in-law,⁴ — and the abbot,⁵

With all the rest of that comforted crew, —

Destruccion straight shall dog them at the heels,⁶ —

Good uncle, help to order several powers

* With all my heart

I pardon him. The old copies read — I pardon him with all my heart. The tra. position was made by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

³ A god on earth thou art. So, in Cymbeline

"He sits 'mongst men, like a descended god." STEEVENS.

⁴ But for our truly brother-in-law, The brother-in-law meant, was John duke of Exeter and Earl of Huntingdon (own brother to King Richard II.) and who had married with the lady Elizabeth, sister of Henry Bolingbroke. THEOBALD.

⁵ — the abbot, i. e. the Abbot of Westminster.

THEOBALD.

⁶ Destruccion straight shall dog them at the heels. Again, in King Richard III.

"Death and Destruccion dog thee at the heels."

STEEVENS.

To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are:
 They shall not live within this world, I swear,
 But I will have them, if I once know where.
 Uncle, farewell,—and confin too,* adieu:
 Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.
 DUCH. Come, my old lon;—I pray God make thee new. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

Enter EXTON, and a Servant.

EXTON. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?
Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?
 Was it not so?

SERV. Those were his very words.

EXTON. Have I no friend? quoth he: he spake it twice,
 And urg'd it twice together; did he not?

SERV. He did.

EXTON. And, speaking it, he wistly look'd on me;
 As who should say,—I would, thou wert the man
 That would divorce this terror from my heart;
 Meaning, the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go;
 I am the king's friend, and will rid his foe.

[Exeunt.

* —confin too, adieu:] Too, which is not in the old copy, was added by Mr. Theobald, for the sake of the metre.

SCENE V.

Pomfret. The Dungeon of the Castle.

Enter King RICHARD.

K. RICH. I have been studying how I may compare
This prison, where I live, unto the world:
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; Yet I'll hammer it out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
My soul, the father: and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;⁵
In limours, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better fort,
As thoughts of things divine, are intermix'd
With scruples, and do set the word itself
Against the word:⁶
As thus, Come,—little ones; and then again,
It is as hard to come, as for a camel
To thread the postern of a needle's eye.
Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot

⁵ ——— people this little world;] i. e. his own frame; — “the state of man;” which in our author’s Julius Cæsar is said to be “like to a little kingdom.” So also, in his Lover’s Complaint:

“Storming my world with sorrow’s wind and rain.”

Again, in King Lear:

“Stives in this little world of man to out-scorn

“The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.” MALONE.

⁶ ——— the word itself

Against the word:] By the word, I suppose, is meant the Isly word. The folio reads:

——— the faith itself

Against the faith. STEEVENS.

The reading of the text is that of the first quarto, 1597.

MALONE.

Unlikely wonders: how these vain weak nails
 May tear a passage through the flinty ribs
 Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;
 And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.
 Thoughts tending to content, flatter themselves,—
 That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
 Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars,
 Who, sitting in the stocks, refuse their shame,—
 That many have; and others must sit there:
 And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
 Bearing their own misfortune on the back
 Of such as have before endur'd the like.
 Thus play I, in one person,⁷ many people,
 And none contented: Sometimes am I king;
 Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
 And so I am: Then crushing penury
 Persuades me I was better when a king;
 Then am I king'd again: and, by-and-by,
 I think that I am nothing'd by Bolingbroke,
 And straight am nothing:—But, whate'er I am,
 Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
 With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
 With being nothing.—Musick do I hear? [Musick.
 Ha, ha! keep time:—How sour sweet musick is,
 When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
 So is it in the musick of men's lives.
 And here have I the daintiness of ear,
 To check⁸ time broke in a disorder'd string;

⁷ Thus play I, in one person,] Alluding, perhaps, to the necessities of our early theatres. The title-pages of some of our Moralities shew, that three or four characters were frequently represented by one person. STEEVENS.

Thus the first quarto, 1597. All the subsequent old copies have—prison. MALONE.

⁸ To check—] Thus the first quarto, 1597. The folio reads—To hear. Of this play the first quarto copy is much more valuable than that of the folio. MALONE.

But, for the concord of my state and time,
 Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
 I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.
 For now hath time made me his numb'ring clock;
 My thoughts are minutes; and, with sighs, they jar
 Their watches on to mine eyes, the outward watch,

*For now hath time made me his numb'ring clock;
 My thoughts are minutes; and, with sighs, they jar
 Their watches on to mine eyes, the outward watch, &c.]* I think this passage must be corrupt, but I know not well how to make it better. The first quarto reads:

*My thoughts are minutes; and with sighs they jar,
 Their watches on unto mine eyes the outward watch.*

The quarto 1615:

*My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs they jar
 Their watches on unto mine eyes the outward watch.*

The first folio agrees with the second quarto.

Perhaps out of these two readings the right may be made. Watch seems to be used in a double sense, for a quantity of time, and for the instrument that measures time. I read, but with no great confidence, thus:

*My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs they jar
 Their watches on; mine eyes the outward watch,
 Where, &c. JOHNSON.*

I am unable to throw any certain light on this passage. A few hints, however, which may tend to its illustration, are left for the service of future commentators.

The outward watch, as I am informed, was the moveable figure of a man habited like a watchman, with a pole and lantern in his hand. The figure had the word—watch written on its forehead; and was placed above the dial-plate. This information was derived from an artist after the operation of a friend; therefore neither Mr. Toller, who communicated it, or myself, can vouch for its authenticity, or with any degree of confidence apply it to the passage before us. Such a figure, however, appears to have been alluded to in Ben Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour: "——he looks like one of these motions in a great antique clock," &c. A motion anciently signified a puppet. Again, in his Sejanus:

"Observe him, as his watch observes his clock."

Again, in Churchyard's Chastity, 1595:

"The clocke will strike in haste, I heare the watch
 "That sonnd the bell——"

Whereto my finger, like a dial's point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.
Now, fir, the sound, that tells what hour it is,²
Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: So sighs, and tears, and groans,
Show minutes, times, and hours:—but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand fooling here, his Jack o'the clock.³

The same thought also occurs in Greene's Perimeter, 1588:

"Disquiet thoughts the minutes of her watch."

To jar is, I believe, to make that noise which is called striking.

So, in The Winter's Tale:

"——I love thee not a jar o'the clock behind," &c.

Again, in The Spanish Tragedy:

"——the minutes jarring, the clock striking."

STEEVENS.

There appears to be no reason for supposing with Dr. Johnson, that this passage is corrupt. It should be recollected, that there are three ways in which a clock notices the progress of time; viz. by the libration of the pendulum, the index on the dial, and the striking of the hour. To these, the king, in his comparison, severally alludes; his sighs corresponding to the jarring of the pendulum, which, at the same time that it watches or numbers the seconds, marks also their progress in minutes on the dial or outward watch, to which the king compares his eyes; and their want of figure is supplied by a succession of tears, or (to use an expression of Milton) minute drops: his finger, by as regularly wiping these away, performs the office of the dial's point:—his clamorous groans are the sounds that tell the hour.

In K. Henry IV. Part II. Tears are used in a similar manner:

"But Hairy Ives, that shall convert those tears,

"By oumber, into hour of happiness." HENLEY.

² Now, fir, &c.] Should we not read thus:

*Now, fir, the sounds that tell what hour it is,
Are clamorous groans,*" &c. "RITSON.

³ — his Jack o' the clock.] That is, I strike for him. One of these automata is alluded to in K. Richard III. Act IV. sc. iii:

"Because that, like a Jack, thou keep'st the stroke,

"Between thy begging and my meditation."

This musick mads me, let it sound no more ;⁴
 For, though it have holpe madmen to their wits,⁵
 In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad,
 Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!
 For 'tis a sign of love ; and love to Richard
 Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.⁶

Enter Groom.

GROOM. Hail, royal prince!

K. RICH. Thanks, noble peer ;
 The cheapest of us is ten groats to dear.
 What art thou ? and how comest thou hither,
 Where no man never comes, but that sad dog'
 That brings me food, to make misfortune live?

Again, in an old comedy, entitled, If this be not a good Play, the Devil is in it, 1612 :

" — so would I,

" And we then jerk o' the clockhouse." STEVENS.

⁴ This musick mads me, let it sound no more] So, in our author's Rape of Lucrece :

" The little birds that tune their morning throats,

" Make her moans mad with their sweet melody."

MALONE.

⁵ For, though it have holpe madmen to their wits] In what degree musick was supposed to be useful in curing madness, the reader may receive information from Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Part II. Sect II. REED.

The allusion is perhaps, to the persons bit by the tarantula, who are said to be cured by musick. MALONE.

⁶ — and love to Richard

Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world] i. e. it is as strange and uncommon as a brooch which is now no longer worn. So, in All's well that ends well : " Virgility, like an old counsellor, wears her rap out of fashion, thickly suited, but uncomfortable; just like the brooch and the toothpick, which were not new." MALONE.

— in this all-hating world.] I believe the meaning is, this world in which I am universally hated. JOHNSON.

⁷ Where no man never comes, but that sad dog—]. It should be remembered that the word sad was in the time of our author used

GROOM. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
 When thou wert king; who, travelling towards York,
 With much ado, at length have gotten leave
 To look upon my sometimes* master's face.
 O, how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld,
 In London streets, that coronation day,
 When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
 That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid;
 That horse, that I so carefully have dress'd!

K. RICH. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle friend,
 How went he under him?

GROOM. So proudly, as if he disdain'd the ground.

K. RICH. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!

That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
 This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
 Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
 (Since pride must have a fall,) and break the neck
 Of that proud man, that did usurp his back?
 Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
 Since thou, created to be aw'd by man,
 Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;
 And yet I bear a burden like an ass.
 Spur-gall'd, and tir'd, by jauncing Bolingbroke.†

for groom. The expression will then be the same as if he had said, that grave, that gloomy villain. So, in Holinshed, p. 730: "With that, the recorder called Fitzwilliam, a fat man, and an honest," &c.

STEVENS.

* —[sometimes master's face.] Sometimes was used for formerly, as well as sometimes, which the modern editors have substituted.
 So, in Speed's History of Great Britain, 1611:—"A catalogue of the religious houses, he sometimes in England and Wales." MALONE.

The old copy, redundantly,— —[sometimes royal master's face. STEVENS.

† —[by jauncing Bolingbroke.] Jaunce and jount were synonymous words. Ben Jonson uses grantes in his Tale of a Tub:

Enter Keeper, with a dish,

KEEP. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.
{To the Groom.

K. RICH. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert
 away.

GROOM. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall lay, {Exit,

KEEP. My lord, will't please you to fall to?

K. RICH. I asse of it first, as thou art wont to do.

KEEP. My lord, I dare not; sir Pierce of Exton, who

Lately came from the king, commands the contrary.

K. RICH. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and thee!

Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

{Beats the Keeper.

KEEP. Help, help, help!

Enter EXTON, and Servants, armed.

K. RICH. How now? what means death in this rude assault?

Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument.
{Snatching a weapon, and killing one.

Go thou, and fill another room in hell.

{He kills another; then EXTON strikes him down.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,

That staggers thus my person.—EXTON, thy fierce hand

Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land.

"I would I had a few more graces of it:

"And you say the word, send me to Jericho."

STEVENS.

Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high;
 Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die.²
 [Dies.³

2 — lets to die.] Shakspeare in this scene has followed Holinshed, who took his account of Richard's death from Hall, as Hall did from Fabian, in whose Chronicle, I believe, this story of Sir Piers of Exton first appeared. Proffess, who had been in England in 1396, and who appears to have finished his Chronicle soon after the death of the king, says, "how he died, and by what means, I could not tell whaone I wrote this cronicle." Had he been murdered by eight armed men, (for such is Fabian's story,) "four of whom he slew with his own hand," and from whom he must have received many wounds, surely such an event must have reached the ears of Froissart, who had a great regard for the king, having received from him at his departure from England "a goblet of silver and gilt, waying two markes of silver, and within it a G. nobles; by the which (he adds) I am as yet the better, and that be as longe as I live; wherelore I am bounde to praye to God for his soule, and wyth muche sorowe I wyte of his deathe."

Not is this story of his murder consistent with the account (which is not controverted) of his body being brought to London and exposed in Cheapside for two hours, ("his heade on a blacke quethen, and his visage open,") where it was viewed, says Froissart, by twenty thousand persons. The account given by Stowe, who seems to have had before him a Manuscript History of the latter part of Richard's life, written by a person who was with him in Wales, appears much more probable. He says, "he was imprisoned in Pomfrat Castle, where xv dayes and nightes they vexed him with continuall hunger, thirst and cold, and finally bereft him of his life, with such a kind of death as never before that time was knowen in England, saith Sir John Fossefue," probably in his Disclaynacion touching the title of the House of York, a work yet, I believe, somewhere existing in MS. Sir John Fossefue was called to the bar a few years after the death of Richard: living therefore so near the time, his testimony is of the highest weight. And with him Harding, who is supposed to have been at the battle of Shrewsbury in 1403. concurs: "Men sayd far-lugned he was." Chron. 1543, fol. 199. So also Walsingham, who wrote in the time of Henry V. and Polydore Virgil.

The Piesies in the Manifesto which they published against King Henry IV. in the third yeare of his reigo, the day before the battle of Shrewsbury, expressly charge him with having "carried his sovereign lord traiterously within the castell of Pomfrat, with-

EXTON. As full of valour, as of royal blood:
 Both have I spilt; O, would the deed were good!
 For now the devil, that told me—I did well,
 Says, that this deed is chronicled in hell.
 This dead king to the living king I'll bear;—
 Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.
[Exeunt.

out the consent or the judgement of the lordes of the realm, by the space of threene daies and so many nightes, (which is horrible among Christian people to be heard,) with hunger, thirst, and cold to praye." Had the story of Sir Pierre of Eaton been true, it undoubtedly must have rattled them. Their not mentioning it is decisive.

If, however, we are to give credit to Sir John Hayward, this controverted point will not admit of dispute; for in The First Part of the Life and Reigne of King Henry IV. 410. 1599, after relating the story of King Richard's assassination, he very gravely tells us, that "after being telled to the ground, he* with a faint and feeble voice groaned forth these words: "My great grandfather Edward II." &c. Mr. Hume in his entertaining, but often superficial, History of England, has not been weak enough to insert this fictitious dying speech. He might, however, have lulled it with as much propriety as an abridgement of the oration of the Bishop of Carlisle, on the deposition of the king being propounded in parliament, which Hayward feigned in imitation of Livy, grounding himself on a few sentences picked in our old Chronicles, which he has expanded into thirteen quarto pages. The writers of the Parliamentary History have in this matter been as careless as Mr. Hume. MALONE.

² Dir.) The representation here given of the King's death is precisely agreeable to Hall and Holinshed. But the fact was otherwise. He refused food for several days, and died of abstinence and a broken heart. See Walsingham, Otterbourne, the Monk of Evesham, the continuator of the History of Croyland, and the anonymous Godslow Chronicle. RITSON.

S C E N E VI.

Windsor. A Room in the Castle:

Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE, and YORK, with Lords and Attendants.

BOLING. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear,
Is—that the rebels have consum'd with fire
Our town of Gloucester in Gloucestershire;
But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

Welcome, my lord: What is the news?

NORTH. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness.

The next news is, I have to London sent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt and Kent;⁴
The manner of their taking may appear
At large discoursed in this paper here.

[Presenting a paper.]

BOLING. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter FITZWATER.

FITZ. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London

⁴ ——— of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent;] So the folio.
The quarto reads—of Oxford, Salisbury, Blunt, and Kent. It appears from the histories of this reign that the reading of the folio is right. MALONE.

The heads of Brocas, and Sir Bennet Seely;
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,
That fought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

BOLING. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;

Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter PERCY, with the Bishop of Carlisle.

PERCY. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster,

With clog of conscience, and four melancholy,
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;⁵
But here is Carlisle living, to abide
Thy kingly doom, and sentence of his pride.

BOLING. Carlisle, this is your doom; ⁶—
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life;
So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife:
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

⁵ This grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster,——

Hath yielded up his body to the grave;] This Abbot of Westminster was William de Colchester. The relation here given of his death, after Holinshed's Chronicle, is untrue, as he survived the King many years; and though called "the grand conspirator," it is very doubtful whether he had any concern in the conspiracy; at least nothing was proved against him. RITSON.

⁶ Carlisle, this is your doom:] This prelate was committed to the Tower, but on the intercession of his friends, obtained leave to change his prison for Westminster-Abbey. In order to deprive him of his see, the Pope, at the King's instance, translated him to a bishoprick in partibus infidelium; and the only preferment he could ever after obtain, was a rectory in Gloucestershire. He died in 1409. RITSON.

Enter EXTON, with Attendants bearing a coffin. :

EXTON. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bourdeaux, by me hither brought.

BOLING. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought
A deed of slander, with thy fatal hand,
Upon my head, and all this famous land.

EXTON. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed.

BOLING. They love not poison that do poison need,
Nor do I thee; though I did wish him dead
I hate the murderer, love him murdered.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,
But neither my good word, nor princely favour:
With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never show thy head by day nor light.—
Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow;
Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,
And put on sullen black incontinent;
I'll make a voyage to the Holy land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand:—
March sadly after; grace my mournings here,
In weeping after this untimely bier. [Exeunt.]

? This play is extracted from the Chronicle of Holinshed, in which many passages may be found which Shakspeare has, with very little alteration, transplanted into his scenes; particularly a speech of the Bishop of Carlisle, in defence of King Richard's unalienable right, and immunity from human jurisdiction.

Johnson who, in his Catiline and Sejanus, has inserted many speeches from the Roman historians, was perhaps induced to that practice by the example of Shakspeare, who had condescended sometimes to copy more ignoble writers. But Shakspeare had more of his own than Johnson; and, if he sometimes was willing to spare his labour, showed by what he performed at other times, that his extralabour was made by choice or idleness rather than necessity.

This play is one of those which Shakspeare has apparently revised; but as success in works of invention is not always proportionate to labour, it is not finished at last with the happy force of some other of his tragedies, nor can be said much to affect the passions, or enlarge the understanding. JOHNSON.

The notion that Shakspeare revised this Play, though it has long prevailed, appears to me extremely doubtful; or, to speak more plainly, I do not believe it. See further on this subject in An Attempt to ascertain the order of his plays, Vol. II. MALONE.

KING HENRY IV.

PART I.*

M 4

* KING HENRY IV. PART I.] The transactions contained in this historical drama are comprised within the period of about ten months; for the action commences with the news brought of Hotspur having defeated the Scots under Arrhibaldi earl of Douglas at Holmedon, (or Halidown hill,) which battle was fought on Holyrood day, (the 14th of September,) 1402; and it closes with the defeat and death of Hotspur at Shrewsbury; which engagement happened on Saturday the 21st of July, (the eve of Saint Mary Magdalen) in the year 1403. THEOBALD.

This play was first entered at Stationers' Hall, Feb. 25, 1597, by Andrew Wise. Again, by M. Wolfe, Jan. 9, 1598. For the piece supposed to have been its original, see Six old Plays on which Shakspeare founded, &c. published for S. Leariolt, Charing-Cross.

STEEVENS.

Shakspeare has apparently designed a regular connection of these dramatic histories from Richard the Second to Henry the Fifth. King Henry, at the end of Richard the Second, declares his purpose to visit the Holy Land, which he resumes in the first speech of this play. The complaint made by King Henry in the last act of Richard the Second, of the wildness of his son, prepares the reader for the follies which are here so herecounted, and the characters which are now to be exhibited. JOHNSON.

This comedy was written, I believe, in the year 1597. See An Attempt to ascertain the Order of Shakspeare's Plays, Vol. II.

MATONE.

PERSONS represented.

King Henry the Fourth.

Henry, Prince of Wales, } sons to the King.
Prince John of Lancaster, }

Earl of Westmoreland, } friends to the King.
Sir Walter Blunt.

Thomas Percy, Earl of Worcester.

Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland:

Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur, his son.

Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March.

Scroop, Archbishop of York.

Archibald, Earl of Douglas.

Owen Glendower.

Sir Richard Vernon.

Sir John Falstaff.

Points.

Gadfly.

Peto.

Bardolph,

Lady Percy, wife to Hotspur, and sister to Mortimer.

Lady Mortimer, daughter to Glendower, and wife to Mortimer.

Mrs. Quickly, hostess of a tavern in Eastcheap.

Lords, Officers, Sheriff, Vintner, Chamberlain, Drawers, two Carriers, Travellers, and Attendants.

SCENE, England.

* Prince John of Lancaster.] The persons of the drama were originally collected by Mr. Rowe, who has given the title of Duke of Lancaster to Prince John, a mistake which Shakspeare has been so wholly guilty of in the first part of this play, though in the second he has fallen into the same error. King Henry IV. was himself the last person that ever bore the title of Duke of Lancaster. But all his sons (till they had peerages, as Clarence, Bedford, Gloucester,) were distinguished by the name of the royal house, as John of Lancaster, Humphrey of Lancaster, &c. and in that proper style, the precent John (who became afterwards so illustrious by the title of Duke of Bedford,) is always mentioned in the play before us. STANFORD.

Woe, O Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my grandfather;
 I have break'd the life of battle life;
 Then thou perchance wilt have more of me;
 Thy sword my thoughts more than the sword my flesh -
 But through the door of life and life have forth.

SHAKESPEARE.

First Part of
 King Henry the Fourth.
 Scene, near Barnet.

And time, that takes away of all the world,
 And here a step, O, I would prophesy,
 But that the worthy and wild hand of death
 Lies on my dagger. No, Henry thou art dead,
 And feed for -

FIRST PART OF
KING HENRY IV.

A'CT I. SCENE I.

London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King HENRY, WESTMORELAND, Sir WALTER BLUNT, and Others.

K. HEN. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils^a
To be commenc'd in stronds afar remote.
No more the thirsty Erinnys of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;^b

^a Find we a time for feightid peace to pant,

And breathe short-winded accents of new broils—] That is, let us soften peace to rest a while without disturbance, that she may recover breath to propose new wars. JOHNSON.

^b No more the thirsty Erinnys of this soil

Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;] See Mr. M. Mason's note, p. 173. The old copies read—infrance.

Perhaps the following conjecture may be thought very far fetch'd, and yet I am willing to venture it, because it often happens that a wrong reading has affinity to the right. We might read:

—the thirsty entrants of the soil;

i. e. those who set foot on this kingdom through the thirst of power or conquest, as the speaker himself had done, on his return to England after banishment.

Whoever is accustomed to the old copies of this author, will generally find the words consequents, occurrents, ingrediente, spelt consequence, occurrence, ingredience; and thus, perhaps, the French word entrants, anglicized by Shakspeare, might have been corrupted into sutance, which affords no very apparent meaning.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,

By her lips Shakspeare may mean the lips of peace, who is mentioned in the second line; or may use the thirsty entrance of the soil, for the pious swiftness of the earth, through which all moisture enters, and is thirstily drank, or soaked up.

So, in an Ode inserted by Gaseigne in his and Francis Knovel-meth's translation of the Phoenix of Euripides:

"And make the greedy ground a drinking cup,

"To put the blood of murdered bodies up." STEVENS.

If there be no corruption in the text, I believe Shakspeare meant, however licentiously, to say, No more shall this soil have the lips of her thirsty entrance, or mouth, daubed with the blood of her own children.

His lips, in my apprehension, refers to soil in the preceding line, and not to peace, as has been suggested. Shakspeare seldom attends to the integrity of his metaphors. In the second of these lines he considers the soil or earth of England as a person; (So, in King Richard II.

"Tells them, he does beside a bleeding load,

"Gaping for life under great Bolingbroke.") and yet in the first line the soil must be understood in its ordinary material sense, as also in a subsequent line in which its fields are said to be channelled with war. Of this kind of incongruity our author's plays furnish innumerable instances.

Dau's, the reading of the earliest copy, is confirmed by a passage in K. Richard II., where we again meet with the image presented here:

"For that our kingdom's verth shall not be soild

"With that dear blood which it hath fostered."

The same kind of imagery is found in K. Henry VI. P. III:

"Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk."

In which passage, as well as in that before us, the poet had perhaps the sacred writings in his thoughts: "And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand," Gen. iv. 2. This last observation has been made by an anonymous writer.

Again, in K. Richard II.:

"Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth,

"Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood."

The earth may with equal propriety be said to drink her lips with blood, as to be made drunk with blood.

A passage in the old play of King John, 1591, may throw some light on that before us:

"Is all the blood y-spilt on either part,

"Closing the crannies of this thirsty earth,

"Grown to a love-game, and a bridal feast?" MALONE.

Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs

The filthy entrance of the soil is nothing more or less, than the face of the earth parch'd and crack'd as it always appears in a dry summer. As to its being personified, it is certainly no such unusual practice with Shakspeare. Every one talks familiarly of Mother Earth; and they who live upon her face, may without much impropriety be called her children. Our author only confuses the image to his own country. The allusion is to the Baroor' warr.

RITSON.

The amendment which I should propose, is to read Eriays, instead of entrance.—By Eriays is meant the fury of discord. The Eriays of the soil, may possibly be considered as an uncommon mode of expression, as in truth it is; but it is justified by a passage in the second Æneid of Virgil, where Æneas calls Helen— — Itaja & patriæ communis Erinoyr.

And an expression somewhat similar occurs in the first part of King Henry VI. where Sir William Lucy says:

"Is Talbot slain? the Frenchman's ooely scourge,

"Your kingdom's terror, and black Nemesis?"

It is evident that the words, her own children, her fields, her flowers, must all necessarily refer to this soil; and that Shakspeare in this place, as in many others, uses the personal pronoun instead of the impersonal; its instead of its; unless we suppose he means to personify the soil, as he does in Richard II. where Bolingbroke departing on his exile says:

"——— sweet soil, adieu!

"My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet." M. MASON.

Mr. M. Mason's conjecture (which I prefer to any explanation hitherto offered respecting this difficult passage) may receive support from N. Ling's Epistle prefixed to Wil's Commonwealth, 1598:

"—— I knowe there is nothing in this worlde but is subiect to the Eryas of ill-disposed persons."—The same phrase also occurs in the tenth book of Lucan:

Dedecus Egypti, Latie ferat Erinoyr.

Amidst these uncertainties of opinion, however, let me present our readers with a single last on which they may implicitly rely; viz. that Shakspeare could not have designed to open his play with a speech, the fifth line of which is obscure enough to demand a series of comments twice as long as the dialogue to which it is appended. All that is wanted, on this emergency, seems to be— a just and striking personification, or, rather, a proper name. The former of these is not discoverable in the old reading—entrance; but the latter, furnished by Mr. M. Mason, may, I think, be safely admitted, as it affords a natural unembarrassed introduction to the train of imagery that succeeds.

Of hostile paces: those opposed eyes,
Which,—like the meteors of a troubled heaven,⁴
All of one nature, of one substance bred,—
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery.
Shall now, in mutual, well-becoming ranks,
March all one way; and be no more oppos'd
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulcher of Christ,⁵

Let us likewise recollect, that, by the first editors of our author, Hyperion had been changed into Epinus; and that Marston's Infallible Conjurist, 1613, concludes with a speech so darkened by corruptions, that the compassions in the fourth line of it is absolutely unintelligible. — It stands as follows:

"Night, like a masque, is entered heaven's great hall,
"With thousand torches ushering the way;
"To Rise will we consecrate this evening,
"Like Misfermis skating of the brack,
"Weele make this night the day," &c.

Is it impossible, therefore, that Epinus may have been blundered into Hyperion, a transformation almost as perverse and mysterious as the foregoing in Marston's tragedy?

Being nevertheless aware that Mr. M. Mason's gallant effort to produce an easy sense, will provoke the slight objections and petty cavils of such as restrain themselves within the bounds of timid conjecture, it is necessary I should subjoin, that his present emendation was not suggested in our text on merely my own judgement, but with the deliberate approbation of Dr. Farmer.—Having now prepared for controversy—signa sanant! STEVENS.

⁴ — Like the meteor of a troubled heaven,] Namely, long streaks of red, which represent the lines of armies; the appearance of which, and their likeness to such lines, gave occasion to all the superstition of the common people concerning armies in the air, &c.

WARBURTON.

⁵ As far as to the sepulcher &c.] The lawfulness and justice of the holy wars have been much disputed; but perhaps there is a principle on which the question may be easily determined. If it be part of the religion of the Mohammedans to participate by the sword all other religions, it is, by the laws of self-defence, lawful for men of every other religion, and for Christians among others,

(Whose foldier now, under whose blessed cross
We are impicssed and engag'd to fight.)
Forthwith a power of English shall we levy;⁶
Whose arms were moulded in their mothers' womb
To chase these pagans, in those holy fields,
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet,
Which, fourteen hundred years ago, were nail'd
For our advantage, on the bitter cross.
But this our purpose is a twelve-month old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you—we will go;
Therefore we meet not now:—Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expedience.⁷

WEST. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits⁸ of the charge set down
But yesternight: when, all athwart, there came to make war upon Mahometans, simply as Mahometans, as men obliged by their own principles to make war upon Christians, and only lying in wait till opportunity shall promise them success.

JOHNSON.

⁶ —[shall we levy;] To levy a power of English as far as to the sepulcher of Christ, is an expression quite unexampled, if not corrupt. We might propose lead, without violence to the sense, or too wide a deviation from the traces of the letters. In Parish, however, the same verb is used in a mode as uncommon:

"Naver did thought of mine levy offence." STEVENS.

The expression—"As far as to the sepulcher" &c. does not, as I conceive, signify—to the distance of &c. but—as far only as regards the sepulcher &c. DOUGL.

⁷ Therefore we meet not now;] i. e. not on that account do we now meet;—we are not now assembled, to acquaint you with our intended expedition. MALONE.

⁸ —[this dear expedience.] For expedition. WARBURTON.

So, in Antony and Cleopatra:

"——— I shall break

"The cause of our expedition to the queen." STEVENS.

⁹ And many limits—] Limits for estimates. WARBURTON.

A post from Wales, loaden with heavy news;
 Whole worst was,—that the noble Mortimer,
 Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
 Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
 And a thousand of his people butchered:
 Upon whose dead corps there was such misuse,
 Such beastly, shameless transformation,
 By those Welshwomen done,³ as may not be,
 Without much shame, retold or spoken of.

K. HEN. It seems then, that the tidings of this broil

Brake off our business for the Holy land.

WEST. This, match'd with other, did, my gracious
 lord;

For more uneven and unwelcome news
 Came from the north, and thus it did import.
 On Holy-rood day, the gallant Hotspur there,
 Young Harry Percy,³ and brave Archibald,⁴

Limits, as Mr. Heath observes, may mean, estimates, rough sketches or calculations. STEVENS.

Limit may mean the regulated and appointed times for the conduct of the business in hand. So, in Measure for Measure:—"between the time of the contract and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wreck'd at sea." Agaro, to Macbeth:

"—— I'll make so bold to call,

"For 'tis my limited service." MALONE.

³ By those Welshwomen done,] Thus Holinshed, p. 528: "—such shameful villanic executed upon the carcasses of the dead men by the Welshwomen; as the like (I doo believe) hath never or sildome beene practised." STEVENS.

³ ——— the gallant Hotspur there,

Young Harry Percy,] Holinshed's History of Scotland, p. 240, says: "This Harry Percy was surnamed, for his often picking, Henry Hotspur, as one that seldom times rested, if there were any service to be done abroad." TOLLER.

⁴ ——— Archibald,] Archibald Douglas, earl Douglas.

STEVENS.

That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met,
Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour;
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.

K. HEN. Here is a dear and true-industrious friend,

Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil ⁵
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, ⁶ did sir Walter see

⁵ Stain'd with the variation of each soil—] No circumstance could have been better chosen to mark the expedition of Sir Walter. It is used by Fellsall in a similar manner, "As it were to ride day and night, and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to tith me, but to stand stained with travel." HENLEY.

⁶ Balk'd in their own blood,] I should suppose, that the author might have written either balk'd, or bak'd, i. e. encrusted over with blood dried upon them. A passage in Heywood's Iron Age, 1632, may countenance the latter of these conjectures:

"Troilus lies embalk'd

"In his cold blood,"—

Again, in Hamlet:

"———horribly lick'd

"With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,

"Bak'd and impasted," &c.

Again, in Heywood's Iron Age:

"———bak'd in blood and dust."

Again, ibid:

"———as bak'd in blood." STEEVENS.

Balk is a ridge; and particularly, a ridge of land: here is therefore a metaphor; and perhaps the poet means, in his bold and careless manner of expression: "Ten thousand bloody carcasses piled up together in a long heap."— "A ridge of dead bodies

On Holmedon's plains: Of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake the earl of Fife, and eldest son
To beaten Douglas;⁷ and the earl of Athol
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.⁸

piled up in blood." If this be the meaning of ball'd, for the greater exactness of construction, we might add to the pointing, viz.
Ball'd, in their own blood, &c.

"Piled up in a ridge, and in their own blood," &c. But without this punctuation, as at present, the context is more poetical, and presents a stranger image.

A ball, in the sense here mentioned, is a common expression in Warwickshire, and the northern counties. It is used in the same signification in Chaucer's Plowman's Tale, p. 182, edit. Univ. v. 2428. WATSON.

Ball'd in their own blood, I believe, means, lay'd in haps or killocks, in their own blood. Bliethe's England's Improvement, p. 118, observes: "The mole taketh balls in meads and pastures." In Leland's Itinerary, Vol. V. p. 16 and 118, Vol. VII. p. 10, a ball signifies a land or hill. Mr. Pope in the Iliad, has the same thought:

"On heaps the Greeks, on heaps the Trojans blid,
"And thinking round them rise the hills of dead."

TOLLET.

⁷ Mordake the earl of Fife, and eldest son

To beaten Douglas;] The article—his, which is wanting in the old copies, was supplied by Mr. Pope. Mr. Malone, however, thinks it needless, and says: "the word earl is here used as a disyllable."

Mordake earl of Fife, who was son to the duke of Albany, regent of Scotland, as here called the son of earl Douglas, through a mistake into which the poet was led by the omission of a comma in the passage of Holinshed from whence he took this account of the Scottish prisoners. It stands thus in the historian: "—and of prisoners, Mordake earl of Fife, son to the governor Archibald earl Douglas, &c." The want of a comma after governor, makes these words appear to be the description of one and the same person, and so the poet understood them; but by putting the stop in the proper place, it will then be manifest that in this list Mordake who was son to the governor of Scotland, was the first prisoner, and that Archibald earl of Douglas was the second, and so on. STEVENS.

⁸ — and Menteith.] This is a mistake of Holinshed in his English History, for in that of Scotland, p. 259, 262, and 413, he speaks of the earl of Fife and Menteith as one and the same person.

STEVENS.

And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? ha, cousin, is it not?

WEST. In faith,

It is ^a a conquest for a prince to boast of.

K. HEN. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin

In envy that my lord Northumberland
Should be the father of so blest a son:
A son, who is the theme of honour's tongue;
Amongst a grove, the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride:
Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O, that it could be prov'd,
'That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd
In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,
And call'd mine—Percy, his—Plantagenet!
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.
But let him from my thoughts:—What think you coz',

Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,*

^a In faith,

It is —] These words are to the first quarto, 1598, by the inaccuracy of the transcriber, placed at the end of the preceding speech, but at a considerable distance from the last word of it. Mr. Pope and the subsequent editors read—Faith 'tis he. MALONE.

* — the prisoners,] Percy had an exclusive right to these prisoners, except the earl of Fife. By the law of arms, every man who had taken any captive, whose redemption did not exceed ten thousand crowns, had him clearly for himself, either to acquit or ransom, at his pleasure. It seems from Camden's Britannia, that Dououny castle in Scotland was built out of the ransom of this very Henry Percy, when taken prisoner at the battle of Otterbourne by an ancestor of the present earl of Eglington. TOLLET.

Percy could not refuse the Earl of Fife to the King; for being a prince of the blood royal, (son to the Duke of Albany, brother to King Robert III.) Henry might justly claim him by his acknowledged military prerogative. STEVENS.

Which he in this adventure hath surpriz'd,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none but Mordake earl of Fife.

WEST. 'This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,

Malevolent to you in all aspects;¹
Which makes him prune himself,² and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.

K. HEN. But I have sent for him to answer this;
And, for this cause, awhile we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.

Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor, so inform the lords;
But come yourself with speed to us again;
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Than out of anger can be uttered.³

WEST. I will, my liege. [Exit.

¹ Malevolent to you in all aspects] An etymological allusion. Worcester is represented as a malignant star that influenced the conduct of Hunsford. HENLEY.

² Which makes him prune himself] The metaphor is taken from a cock, who in his pride prunes himself; that is, picks off the loose feathers to smooth the rest. To prune and to plume, spoken of a bird, is the same. JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson is certainly right in his choice of the reading. So, in The Cobbler's Prophecy, 1594:

"Sith now thou dost but prune thy wings,

"And make thy feathers gay."

Again, in Green's Metamorphosis, 1613:

"Pride makes the fowl to prune his feathers so."

But I am not certain that the verb to prune is justly interpreted. In The Booke of Hantynge, &c. (commonly called The Booke of St. Albans) is the following account of it: "The henke pruneth when she fetcheth oyle with her beake over the taile, and anointeth her feet and her feathers. She plumeth when she pulleth feathers of aile faule and caseth them from her." STEVENS.

³ Than out of anger can be uttered] That is, "More is to be said than anger will suffer me to say: more than can issue from a mind disturbed like mine." JOHNSON.

SCENE II.

The same. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter HENRY, Prince of Wales, and FALSTAFF.

FAL. How, Hal, what time of day is it, lad?

P. HEN. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou would'st truly know.⁵ What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping-houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-colour'd taffata; I see no reason, why thou should'st be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

FAL. Indeed, you come near me, now Hal: for we, that take purfes, go by the moon and seven stars; and not by Phoebus,—he, that wandering knight so fair.⁶ And, I pray thee, sweet wag, when thou art

⁵ — i. e. to demand that truly which thou would'st truly know.] The Prince's objection to the question seems to be, that Falstaff had asked in the night what was the time of the day. JOHNSON.

This cannot be well received as the objection of the Prince; for presently after, the Prince himself says: "Good morrow, Ned," and Poins replies: "Good morrow, sweet lad." The truth may be, that when Shakspeare makes the Prince with Poins a good morrow, he had forgot that the scene commenced at night.

⁶ STEEVENS.

⁶ Phoebus,—he, that wandering knight so fair.] Falstaff flouts the idea of Phoebus, i. e. the sun; but deviates into an allusion to El Doncel del Febo, the knight of the sun in a Spanish romance translated (under the title of The Mirror of Knighthood, &c.) during the age of Shakspeare. This illustrious personage was "most excellently fair," and a great wanderer, as those who travel after him throughout these thick volumes in 4to. will discover. Perhaps the words "that wandering knight so fair," are part of some lost king,—as, God save thy grace, (majesty, I should say; for grace thou wilt have none,)——

P. HEN. What! none?

FAL. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

P. HEN. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

FAL. Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us, that are squires of the night's body, be call'd thieves of the day's beauty;⁷ let us be—Diana's foresters,⁸ gentlemen of the shade, gotten ballad on the subject of this marvellous hero's adventures. In Peete's Old Wives Tale, Com. 1595, Eumecoides, the wandering knight, is a character STEEVENS.

⁷ ——— let not us, that are squires of the night's body, be call'd thieves of the day's beauty;] This conveys no manner of idea to me. How could they be called thieves of the day's beauty? They robbed by moonshine; they could not steal the fair day-light. I have ventured to substitute beauty; and this I take to be the meaning. Let us not be called thieves, the purloiners of that beauty, which, to the proprietors, was the purchase of honest labour and industry by day. THEOBALD.

It is true, as Mr. Theobald has observed, that they could not steal the fair day-light; but I believe our poet by the expression, thieves of the day's beauty, meant only, let not us who are body squires to the night, i. e. adorn the night, be called a disgrace to the day, To take away the beauty of the day, may probably mean, to disgrace it. A squire of the body signified originally, the attendant on a knight; the person who bore his head-piece, spear, and shield. It became afterwards the cant term for a pimp; and is so used in the second part of Dekker's Heaven's Whore, 1630. Again, in The Witty Fair One, 1635, for a procureress: "Here comes the squire of her mistress's body."

Fallstaff however puns on the word knight. See the Coriolanus of Samuel Pegge, Esq. Part I. p. 100. STEEVENS.

There is also, I have no doubt, a pun on the word beauty, which in the western counties is pronounced nearly in the same manner as body. See K. Henry VI Part III:

"So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd body." MALONE.

⁸ Diana's foresters, &c.]

¹ Exile and slander are justly me awarded,

² My wife and heirs take lands and lawful right;

³ And me their lord made dams Diana's knight."

minions of the moon: And let men say, we be men of good government; being govern'd as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we—steal.

P. HEN. Thou say'st well; and it holds well too: for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, doth ebb and flow like the sea; being govern'd as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: A purse of gold most resolutely snatch'd on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing—lay by;² and spent with crying—bring in:³ now, in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder; and, by and by, in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.

FAL. By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?⁴

So lamenteth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, in The Mirror of Magistrates. HENDERSON.

We learn from Hall, that certain persons who appeared as foresters in a pageant exhibited in the reign of King Henry VIII. were called Diana's knights. MALONE.

² — got with swearing—lay by;] i. e. swearing at the passengers they robbed, lay by your arms; or rather, lay by was a phrase then signified stand still, addrest to those who were preparing to rush forward. But the Oxford editor kindly accommodates these old thieves with a new cant phrase, taken from Bagshot-heath or Finchley-common, of lag out. WARBURTON.

To lay by, is a phrase adopted from navigation, and signifies, by slackening sail to become stationary. It occurs again in King Henry VIII.

"Evan the billows of the sea

"Hung their heads, and then lay by." STEEVENS.

³ — and spent with crying, bring in;] i. e. more wine.

MALONE.

⁴ — And is not my hostess of the tavern &c.] We meet with the same kind of humour as is contained in this and the three following speeches, in The Mostellaria of Plautus, Act I. sc. iii:

"Jampissem ecclior frigidâ non lavi magis lubentior,

"Nec nuda me malius, mea Scapha, raris esse defœcatam.

P. HEN. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle.⁴ And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance?⁵

See. "Eventus rebus omnibus, velut homo messis magna fuit.

Pit. "Quid ea messis attinet ad meam lavationem?

See. "Nihil plus, quam lavatio tua ad messim."

In the want of connection to what went before, probably assisting the humour of the Prince's question. STEEVENS.

This kind of humour is often met with in old plays. In The Gallathea of Lyly, Philida says: "It is a pinta that nature framed you not a woman.

"Gall. There is a tree in Tylos, &c.

"Phil. What a toy it is to tell me of that tree, being nothing to the purpose." &c.

Ben Jonson calls it a game of vapours. FARMER.

"⁴ As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle.] Mr. Rowe took notice of a tradition, that this part of Falstaff was written originally under the name of Oldcastle. An ingenious correspondent hints to me, that the passage above quoted from our author, proves what Mr. Rowe tells us was a tradition. Old lad of the castle seems to have a reference to Oldcastle. Besides, it this had not been the fact, why, in the epilogue to The Second Part of Henry IV. where our author promises to continue his story with Sir John in it, should he say, "Where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions: for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man." This looks like declining a point that had been made an objection to him. I'll give a farther matter in proof, which seems almost to fix the charge. I have read an old play, called, The famous Victories of Henry the Fifth, 'containing the honourable battle of Agincourt.—The action of this piece commences about the 14th year of K. Henry the Fourth's reign, and ends with Henry the Fifth's marrying Princess Catharine of France. The scene opens with Prince Henry's robbery. Sir John Oldcastle is one of the gang, and called Jockie; and Ned and Gadshill are two other comrades.—From this old imperfect sketch, I have a suspicion, Shakespeare might form his two parts of Henry IV. and his history of Henry V.; and consequently it is not improbable, that he might continue the mention of Sir John Oldcastle, till some descendant of that family moved Queen Elizabeth to command him to change the name. THEOBALD.

— my old lad of the castle.] This alludes to the name Shakespeare first gave to this buffoon character, which was Sir John Oldcastle; and when he changed the name he forgot to strike out

FAL. How now, how now, mad wag? what, in thy quips, and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

this expression that alluded to it. The reason of the change was this: one Sir John Oldcastle having suffered in the time of Henry, the Fifth for the opinions of Wicliffe, it gave offence, and therefore the poet altered it to Falstaff, and endeavours to remove the scandal in the epilogue to The Second Part of Henry IV. Fuller takes notice of this matter in his Church History: — "Stage-poets have themselves been very bold with, and others very merry at, the memory of Sir John Oldcastle, whom they have fancied a boon companion, a jovial royster, and a roward to boot. The bell is, Sir John Falstaff hath relieved the memory of Sir John Oldcastle, and of late is substituted buffoon in his place." Book IV, p. 168. But, to be candid, I believe there was no malice in the matter. Shakspeare wanted a droll name to his character, and never considered whom it belonged to. We have a like instance in The Merry Wives of Windsor, where he calls his French quack, Caius, a name at that time very respectable, as belonging to an eminent and learned physician, one of the founders of Caius College in Cambridge. WAARBURTON.

The propriety of this note the reader will find contested at the beginning of K. Henry V. Sir John Oldcastle was not a character ever introduced by Shakspeare, nor did he ever occupy the place of Falstaff. The play in which Oldcastle's name occurs, was not the work of our poet.

Old lad is likewise a familiar compellation to be found in some of our most ancient dramatick pieces. So, in The Trial of Tessaert, 1567: "What, Inclination, old lad art thou there?" In the dedication to Gabriel Harvey's Hunt is up, &c. by T. Nash, 1598, old Dick of the raffle is mentioned.

Again, in Pierre's Supplication, or a New Praise of the Old Affe, 1593: "And here's a luffy ladd of the castell, that will blinde beares, and ride golden asses to death." STREVEN.

Old lad of the raffle, is the same with Old lad of Castile, a Castilian: — Meres reckons Oliver of the raffle amongst his romances; and Gabriel Harvey tells us of "Old lads of the castell with their rapping babble." — roaring boys. — This is therefore no argument for Falstaff's appearing first under the name of Oldcastle. There is however a passage in a play called Amends for Ladies, by Field the player, 1618, which may seem to prove it, unless he confounded the different performances;

P. HEN. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

" ————— Did you never see

" The play where the fat knight, hight Oldcastle,

" Did tell you truly what this honour war?"

FARMER.

Fuller, besides the words cited in the note, has in his Worthies, p. 253, the following passage: "Sir John Oldcastle was full made a thrafoical puff, an emblem of most valour, a make-sport in all plays, for a coward." Speed, likewise, in his Chronicle, edit. 2. p. 178, says: "The author of Tyr Taire Conterfeyns [i. e. Paintons the Jesuit], hath made Oldcastle a ruffian, a robber, and a rebel, and his authority, taken from the stage players, is more befitting the pen of his slanderous report, than the credit of the judicious, being only grounded from the papist and the poet, of like conscience for liar, the one ever feigning, and the other ever falsifying the truth." RITSON.

From the following passage in Tyr Meeting of Gallants at an Ordnaire, or the Waltes in Powles, quarto, 1604, it appears that Sir John Oldcastle was represented on the stage as a very fat man (certainly not in the play printed with that title in 1600):—"Now, signior, how like you mine host? did I not tell you he was a middle round knave and a merrie one too? and if you chaunce to talke of fat Sir John Oldcastle, he will tell you, he was his great grand-father, and not much unlike him in paunch.—" The host, who is here described, returns to the gallants, and entertains them with telling them stories. After his first tale, he says: "Nay gallants, I'll fit you, and now I will serve in another, as good as vinegar and pepper to your roast beefe." — Signior Kirkshawe replies: "Let's have it, let's taste on it, mine host, my noble fat alias."

The cause of all the confusion relative to these two characters, and of the tradition mentioned by Mr. Rowe, that our author changed the name from Oldcastle to Falstaff, (to which I do not give the smallest credit,) seems to have been this. Shakspeare appears evidently to have caught the idea of the character of Falstaff from a wretched play entitled Tyr famous Victoires of King Henry V. (which had been exhibited before 1583,) in which Henry Prince of Wales is a principal character. He is accompanied in his revels and his robberies by Sir John Oldcastle, ("a pamper'd glutton, and a debauchee," as he is called in a piece of that age,) who appears to be the character alluded to in the passage above quoted from The Meeting of Gallants, &c. To this character undoubtedly it is that

FAL. Well, thou hast call'd her to a reckoning, many a time and oft.

Fuller alludes in his Church History, 1656, when he says, "Stage poets have themselves been very bold with, and others very merry at, the memory of Sir John Oldcastle, whom they have fancied a hoon companion, a jovial royster, and a coward to boot." Specil in his History, which was first published in 1611, alludes both to this "hoon companion" of the anonymous K. Henry V. and to the Sir John Oldcastle exhibited in a play of the same name, which was printed in 1600: "The author of This True Conuersion hath made Oldcastle a ruffian, a robber, and a rebel, and his authority taken from the Stage players." Oldcastle is represented as a rebel in the play last mentioned above; in the former play as "a ruffian and a robber."

Shakspeare probably never intended to ridicule the real Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, in any respect; but thought proper to make Falstaff in imitation of his proto-type, the Oldcastle of the old K. Henry V. a mad round knave also. From the first appearance of our author's King Henry IV. the old play in which Sir John Oldcastle had been exhibited, (which was printed in 1598,) was probably never performed. Hence, I conceive, it is, that Fuller says, "Sir John Falstaff has risen the memory of Sir John Oldcastle, and of late is substituted holloen in his place;" which being misunderstood, probably gave rise to the story, that Shakspeare changed the name of his character.

A passage in his Westbiss, folio, 1662, p. 253, shows his meaning still more clearly; and will serve at the same time to point out the source of the mistakes on this subject. — "Sir John Falstolfe, knight, was a native of this county [Norfolk]. To avouch him by many arguments valiant, is to maintain that the flie is bright; though, since, the stage has been over-bold with his memory, making him a Thrafoolical puff, and emblem of mock-Valour. — True it is, Sir John Oldcastle did first bear the brunt of the one, being made the makepost in all plays for a coward. It is easily known out of what purse this black penny came. The papists railing on him for a heretuck; and therefore he must be also a coward; though indeed he was a man of arms, every tooth of him, and as valiant as any of his age.

"Now as I am glad that Sir John Oldcastle is put out, so I am sorry that Sir John Falstolfe is put in, to relieve his memory in this base service; to be the anvil for every dull wit to strike upon. Nor is our comedian excusable by some alteration of his name, writing him Sir John Falstaff, (and making him the property and

P. HEN. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

FAL. No; I'll give thee thy duc, thou hast paid all there.

pleasure of King Henry V. to abuse,) seeing the virioidy of sounds introach on the memory of that worthy knight.

Here we see the alteration is, not that Sir John Oldcastle did first bear the brunt in Shakspeare's play, but in all plays, that is, on the stage in general, before Shakspeare's character had appeared; owing to the malevolence of papists, of which religion it is plain Fuller supposed the writers of those plays in which Oldcastle was exhibited, to have been; nor does he complain of Shakspeare's altering the name of his character from Oldcastle to Falstaff, but of the metaphoric of Falstolfe to Falstaff. Yet I have no doubt that the words above cited, "put out" and "put in," and "by some alteration of his name," that these words alone, misunderstood, gave rise to the misapprehension that has prevailed since the time of Mr. Rowe, relative to this matter. For what is the plain meaning of Fuller's words? "Sir John Falstolfe was in truth a very brave man, though he is now represented on the stage as a cowardly braggart. Before he was thus ridiculed, Sir John Oldcastle, being hated by the papists, was exhibited by papist writers, in all plays, as a coward. Since the new character of Falstaff has appeared, Oldcastle has no longer borne the brunt, has no longer been the object of ridicule: but, as on the one hand I am glad that his memory has been relieved, that the plays in which he was represented have been expelled from the scene, so on the other, I am sorry that so respectable a character as Sir John Falstolfe has been brought on it, and substituted in his place; for however our comick poet [Shakspeare] may have hoped to escape censure by altering the name from Falstolfe to Falstaff, he is certainly culpable, since some imputation must necessarily fall on the brave knight of Norfolk from the similitude of the sounds."

Falstaff having thus grown out of, and immediately succeeding, the other character, (the Oldcastle of the old K. Henry V.) having one or two features in common with him, and being probably represented in the same dress, and with the same fiditious belly, as his predecessor, the two names might have been indiscriminately used by Field and others, without any mistake, or intention to deceive. Perhaps, behind the scenes, in consequence of the circumstances already mentioned, Oldcastle might have been a cant appellation for Falstaff, for a long time. Hence the name might have been prefixed inadvertently, to some play-house copy, to one of the speeches in The Second Part of K. Henry IV.

P. HEN. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and, where it would not, I have used my credit.

FAL. Yea, and so used it, that, were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent, — But, I pr'y-thee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus fobb'd as it is, with the rusty curb of old father

If the verses be examined, in which the name of Falstaff occurs, it will be found, that Oldcastle could not have stood in those places. The only answer that can be given to this, is, that Shakspeare new-wrote each verse in which Falstaff's name occurred; — a labour which those only who are entirely unacquainted with our author's history and works, can suppose him to have undergone. — A passage in the Epilogue to The Second Part of K. Henry IV. rightly understood, appears to me strongly to confirm what has been now suggested. See the note there. MALONE.

¹ And is not a buff jesting a most sweet robe of duranie? To understand the propriety of the Prince's answer, it must be remarked that the French's officers were formerly clad in buff. So that when Falstaff asks, whether his jests is not a sweet wrack, the Prince asks in return whether it will not be a sweet thing to go to prison by running in debt to this sweet wrack. JOHNSON.

The following passage from the old play of Ham-Alley, may serve to confirm Dr. Johnson's observation:

"Look, I have certain goblins in buff jestings,

"Lye ambuscado." — [Enter Serjeant.

Again, in The Comedy of Errors, Act iv:

"A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,

"A fellow all in buff."

Durance, however, might also have signified some lasting kind of buff, such as we call at present, everlasting. So, in Westward Ho, by Dekker and Webster, 1607: "Where did'st thou buy this buff? Let me not live but I will give thee a good suit of durance. Wilt thou take my bond?" &c.

Again, in The Devil's Charter, 1607: "Varlet of oslent, my moscado villain, old heart of durance, my lipid canvas shoulder, and my perpetuana pander." Again, in The Three Ladies of London, 1584: "As the taylor that out of seven yards, Role one and a half of durance." STEVENS.

antick the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

P. HEN. No; thou shalt.

FAL. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.⁴

P. HEN. Thou judgest false already; I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

FAL. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour, as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

P. HEN. For obtaining of suits?⁵

FAL. Yea, for obtaining of suits: whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood, I am as melancholy as a gib cat,⁶ or a lugg'd bear.

⁴ — I'll be a brave judge. } This thought, like many others is taken from the old play of Henry V.

"Hen. V. Ned, so soon as I am king, the first thing I will do shall be to put my lord chief justice out of office; and thou shalt be my lord chief justice of England.

"Ned. Shall I be lord chief justice? By gods wounds, I'll be the bravest lord chief justice that ever was in England."

STEVENS.

⁵ For obtaining of suits? } Suit, spoken of one that attends at court, means a petition; used with respect to the hangman, means the clothes of the offender. JOHNSON.

So, in an ancient Medley, bl. 1:

"The broker hath gay cloaths to sell

"Which from the hangman's budget fell." STEVENS.

See Vol. VI. p. 151, o. 5. The same quibble occurs in Hoffman's Tragedy, 1631: "A poor misdeed, mistress, has a suit to you; and 'tis a good suit, — very good apparel." MALONE.

⁶ — a gib cat,] A gib cat means, I know not why, an old cat. JOHNSON.

A gib cat is the common term in Northamptonshire, and all adjacent counties, to express a de cat. FENY.

"As melancholy as a gib'd cat" is a proverb enumerated among others in Ray's Collection. In A Match at Midnight, 1633,

P. HEN. Or an old lion; or a lover's lute. ⁷

FAL. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe. ⁸

P. HEN. What say'st thou to a hare, ⁹ or the melancholy of Moor-ditch? ¹⁰ is the following passage: "They swell like a couple of gib'd cats, met both by chance in the dark in an old garret." So, in Bulwer's Artificial Changeing, 1653: "Some in mania or melancholy mad-ness have attempted the same, not without success, although they have remained somewhat melancholy like gib'd cats." I believe after all, a gib'd cat is a cat who has been qualified for the feraglio; for all animals so mutilated, become drowsy and melancholy. To glib has certainly that meaning. So, in The Wisher's Tale, Act II. sc. 1:

"And I had rather glib myself than they

"Should not produce fair issue."

In Sidney's Arcadia, however, the same quality in a cat is mentioned, without any reference to the consequences of castration:

"The hare, her sleight; the cat, his melancholy."

STEVENS.

Sheerwood's English Dictionary at the end of Cotgrave's French one says: "Gibbe is an old he cat." Aged animals are not so playful as those which are young; and gib'd or gelded ones are duller than others. So we might read: — as melancholy as a gib cat, or a glib'd cat. TOLLET.

⁷ — as a lover's lute.] See Vol. VI. p. 298, o. 9. MATONE.

⁸ — Lincolnshire bagpipe.] "Lincolnshire bagpipe" is a proverbial saying. Fuller has not attempted to explain it; and Ray only conjectures that the Lincolnshire people may be fond of this instrument than others. DOUCE.

I suspect, that by the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe, is meant the dull croak of a frog, one of the native musickers of that waterish county. STEVENS.

⁹ — a hare.] A hare may be considered as melancholy, because she is upon her form always solitary; and, according to the physick of the times, the flesh of it was supposed to generate melancholy. JOHNSON.

The following passage in Vittoria Corombona, &c. 1612, may prove the best explanation:

" — like your melancholy hare,

"Feed after midnight."

Again, in Drayton's Psycheion, Song the second:

"The melancholy hare is form'd in braken and briets."

FAL. Thou hast the most unfavoury similes;³ and art, indeed, the most comparative,⁴ rascallicst, — sweet young prince, — But, Hal, I pry'thee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God,

The Egyptians in their Hieroglyphits expressed a melancholy man by a late sailing to her form. See Pueri Hieroglyphi. Lib. XII. STEVENS.

² — the melancholy of Moor-ditch ²] It appears from Stowe's Survey, that a broad ditch, called Drep-ditch, formerly pasted the hospital from Moor-fields; and what has a more melancholy appearance than stagnant water?

This ditch is also mentioned in The Gals Herbsack, by Decker, 1609: " — it will be a sorer labour than the cleansing of Augias' stable, or the frowning of Moor-ditch. "

Again, in News from Hell, brought by the Devil's Carrier, by Thomas Derker, 1606: " As touching the river, looke how Moor-ditch shews when the water is three quarters dreyn'd out, and by reason the floumarke of it is overladeo, is ready to fell to casting. So does that; it flinks almost worse, is almost as poisonous, altogether so muddy, altogether so black. " STEVENS.

So, in Taylor's Pennyliffe Pilgrimage, quarto, 1618: " — my body being tired with navr?, and my mind attired with moody, muddy, Moor-ditch melancholy. " MALONE.

Moor-ditch, a part of the ditch surrounding the city of London, between Milkhopgate and Cripple-gate, opened to an unwholesome and impassable morass, and consequently not frequented by the citizens, like other suburban fields which were remarkably pleasant, and the fashionable places of resort. T. WATSON.

³ — similes;] Old roquet — similes. Corroded by the editor of the second folio. MALONE.

⁴ — the most comparative,] Sir T. Hanmer and Dr. Watson after him, read — incomparative, I suppose for incomparable, or preteris; but comparative here means quick at comparisons, or frank in similes, and is properly introduced. JOHNSON.

This epithet is used again, in A² III. sc. ii. of this play, and apparently in the same sense:

" — Hand the push

" Of every beardless vain comparative. "

And in Esop's Legend's Last, A² V. fr. ult. Rosalind tells Blon that he is a man " Full of comparisons and wounding flous. "

STEVENS.

thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought: ⁵ An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir; but I mark'd him not: and yet he talk'd very wisely; but I regarded him not: and yet he talk'd wisely, and in the street too.

P. HEN. Thou did'st well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.⁶

FAL. O, thou hast damnable iteration; ⁷ and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal,—God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do

⁵ I would to God, thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought: } So, in The Discoverie of the Knights of the Posts, 1597, 6ign. C: "In truth they live so so, and it were well if they knew where a commodity of names were to be found, and yet I thinke all the money in their purses could not buy it." REED.

⁶ — wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it. } This is a scriptural expression: "Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets. — I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded." Proverbs, i. 20, and 24. HOLZ WHITE.

⁷ O, thou hast damnable iteration; } For iteration Ss. T. Hamner and Dr. Warburton read attraction, of which the meaning is certainly more apparent; but an editor is not always to change what he does not understand. In the last speech a text is very indecently and abusively applied, to which Falstaff answers, thou hast damnable iteration, or a wicked trick of repeating and applying holy texts. This I think is the meaning. JOHNSON.

Iteration is right, for it also signified simply citation or recitation. So, in Marlow's Dollar Fustes, 1631:

"Here take this book, and peruse it well,

"The iteration of these lines brings gold."

From the context, iterating here appears to mean pronouncing, reciting. Again, in Camden's Remains, 1614: "King Edward 6. disliking the iteration of Fitz," &c. MALONE.

not, I am a villain; I'll be damn'd for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. HEN. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?

FAL. Where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one; an I do not, call me villain, and baffle me.⁷

P. HEN. I see a good amendment of life in thee; from praying, to purse-taking.

Enter POINS, at a distance.

FAL. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation.⁸ Poins!—Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match.⁹

⁷ — and baffle me.] See Mr. Toller's note on K. Richard II. p. 12. STEEVENS.

⁸ — as for for a man to labour in his vocation.] This (as Dr. Farmer observes to me) is undoubtedly a force on Agremon Redcliffe's Politique Discoveries, 1578. From the beginning to the end of this work, the word vocation occurs in almost every paragraph. Thus chapter i:

"That the vocations of men hath been a thing unknown unto philosophers, and other that have treated of Politique Government; of the commoditie that cometh by the knowledge thereof; and the etymology and definition of this worde vocation." Again, chap. xxv:

"Whether a man bring disorderly and evidently retired into any vocation, may lawfully break and abide in the same; and whether the administration in the meane while done by him that is unduely choised, ought to holde, or be of force." STEEVENS.

⁹ — have set a match.] Thus the quarto. So, in Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, 1614: "Peace, fir, they'll be angry if they hear you eves-dropping, now they are sitting their matia." There it seems to mean making an appointment.—The folio reads—set a watch. MALONE.

As no watch is afterwards set, I suppose match to be the true reading. STEEVENS.

O, if men were to be fav'd by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain, that ever cried, Stand, to a true man.

P. HEN. Good morrow, Ned.

POINS. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says monsieur Remorse? What says sir John Sack-and-Sugar? Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about

¹ ——— for John Sack-and-Sugar?] Hentner, p. 88, edit. 1757, speaking of the manners of the English, says, "in potum saporis immittunt faccardum," they put a great deal of sugar in their drink. REXO.

Much inquiry has been made about Falstaff's Sack, and great surprise has been expressed that he should have mixed sugar with it. As they are here mentioned for the first time in this play, it may not be improper to observe that it is probable that Falstaff's wine was Sherry, a Spanish wine, originally made at Xeres. He frequently himself calls it Sherry-sack. Nor will his mixing sugar with sack appear extraordinary, when it is known that it was a very common practice in our author's time to put sugar into all wines. "Clownes and vulgar men (says Fynes Moryson) only use large drinking of beere or ale,—but gentlemen garrawsa only in wine, with which they mix sugar, which I never observed in any other place or kingdom to be used for that purpose. And because the taste of the English is thus delighted with sweetness, the wines in taverns (for I speak not of merchants' or gentlemen's cellars) are commonly mixed at the hilling thereof, to make them pleasant." Iten. 1617. P. III. p. 152. See also Mr. Tytewill's Chaucer, Vol. IV. p. 308: "Among the orders of the royal household in 1604 is the following: [Mss. Harl. 293, fol. 162.] 'And whereas in ymes past, Spanish wines, called Sack, were little or no whitt used in our route,—we now understanding that it is now used in common drink," &c. Sack was, I believe, often mulled in our author's time. See a note, post, on the words, "If sack and sugar be a fo," &c. See also Blount's GLOSSOGRAPHY: "Mullid Sack, (Vinum mollium) because softened and made mild by burning, and a mixture of sager."

Since this note was written, I have found reason to believe that Falstaff's Sack was the dry Spanish wine which we call Moutain Malaga. A passage in Via Rilla ad vitam longam, by Thomas thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-friday last, for a cup of Madeira, and a cold capon's leg?

P. HEN. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs, he will give the devil his due.

POINS. Then art thou damn'd for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. HEN. Else he had been damn'd for cozening the devil.

POINS. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill: There are Veoeer, Dr. of Physicke to Bathe, 4to. 1622, seems to ascertain this:

"Sack is completely hot in the third degree, and of the parts, and therefore it doth vehemently and quickly heat the body.—Some affect to drink sack with sugar, and some without, and upon no other grounds, as I thinke, but as it is best pleasing to their palates. I will speake what I deeme thereof.—Sack, taken by itself is very hot and very penetrative; being taken with sugar, the heat is both somewhat allayed, and the penetrative quality thereof also retarded."

The author afterwards thus speaks of the wine which we now denominate sack, and which was then called Canary: "Canarie-wine, which beareth the name of the islands from whence it is brought, is of some termed a secke, with this adjunct, sweete; but yet very improperly, for it differeth not only from sacks in sweetness and pleasantness of taste, but also in colour and consistence, for it is not so white in colour as sack, nor so thin in substance; wherefore it is more nutritive than sack, and less penetrative.—White wine, Rheoish wine, &c,—do so fix or leave moneths, or within, according to the smallness of thes, attaine unto the height of their goodnes, especially the smaller sort of them. But the stranger sort of wines, as sack, muscadell, malmsey, are best when they are two or three years old."

From hence, therefore, it is clear, that the wine usually called sack to that age was thinner than canary, and was a strong light-coloured dry wine; vin sec; and that it was a Spanish wine as ascertained by the order quoted by Mr. Tyrwhitt, and by several ancient books, Cole in his Dict. 1679, renders sack by Vinum Hispanicum; and Sherwood in his English and French Dict. 1650, by Vin d'Espagne.

MALONE.

pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have visors for you all, you have horses for yourselves; Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester; I have helpeke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap; we may do it as secure as sleep: If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home, and he hang'd.

FAL. Hear me, Yedward; if I tarry at home, and go not, I'll hang you for going.

POINS. You will, chops?

FAL. Hal, wilt thou make one?

P. HEN. Who, I rob? I a thief? not I, by my faith.

FAL. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou comest not of the blood royal, if thou dar'st not stand for ten shillings.³

P. HEN. Well, then, once in my days I'll be a mad-cap.

FAL. Why, that's well said.

P. HEN. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

FAL. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.

P. HEN. I care not.

POINS. Sir John, I pr'ythee, leave the prince

³ — if thou dar'st not stand, &c.] The modern reading [cry stand] may perhaps be right; but I think it necessary to remark, that all the old editions read;—if thou dar'st not stand for ten shillings.

JOHNSON.

Falstaff is quibbling on the word royal. The real or royal was of the value of ten shillings. Almost the same jest occurs in a subsequent scene. The quibble, however, is lost, except the old reading be preserved. Cry, stand, will not support it. STEEVENS.

and me alone; I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure, that he shall go.

FAL. Well, may'st thou have the spirit of persuasion, and he the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may (for recreation sake,) prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewell: You shall find me in Eastcheap.

P. HEN. Farewell, thou latter spring! ³ Farewell All-hallowen summer! ⁴ [Exit FALSTAFF.]

POINS. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow; I have a jest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill, ⁵ shall rob those men that we have ³ — thou latter spring?] Old copies—the latter. Corrected by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

⁴ — All-hallowen summer?] All-hallowen, is All-hallowen-tide, or All-saints' day, which is the last of November. We have still a church in London, which is absurdly styled St. All-hallowen, as if a word which was formed to express the community of saints, could be appropriated to any particular one of the number. In The Play of the Four P's, 1569, this mistake (which might have been a common one) is pleasantly exposed:

"Paré. Friends, here you shall see, even anon,

"Of All-hallowen the blessed jaw-bone,

"Kiss it hardly, with good devotion:" &c.

The characters in this scene are striving who should produce the greatest falsehood, and very probably in their attempts to excel each other, have out-lied even the Romish Kalendar.

Shakspeare's allusion is designed to ridicule an old man with youthful passions. So, in the second part of this play: "— the Martines your mother," STEEVENS.

⁵ Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill,] In former editions—Falstaff, Harvey, Kossib, and Gadshill. Thus have we two persons named, as characters in this play, that were never among the dramatis personæ. But let us see who they were that committed this robbery. In the second Act we come to a scene of the highway. Falstaff, wanting his horse, calls out on Hal, Poins, Bardolph, already way-laid; yourself, and I, will not be there: and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders.

P. HEN. But how shall we part with them in setting forth?

POINS. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves: which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.

P. HEN. Ay, bnt, 'tis like, that they will know us, by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

POINS. Tut! our horses they shall not see, I'll tie them in the wood; our visors we will change, after we leave them; and, sirrah,⁶ I have cases of buckram for the nonce,⁷ to immask our noted outward garments.

and Peto. Presently Gadshill joins them,* with intelligence of travellers being at hand; upon which the Prince says,—“You four shall snoop 'em in a narrow lane, Ned Poins and I will walk lower.” So that the four to be concerned, are Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill. Accordingly, the robbery is committed; and the Prince and Poins afterwards rob them soon. In the Boar's-head tavern, the Prince rallies Peto and Bardolph for their running away, who confess the charge. Is it not plain now that Bardolph and Peto were two of the four robbers? And who then can doubt, but Harvey and Roskill were the names of the others? THEOBALD.

⁶ — sirrah,] Sirrah, in our author's time, as appears from this and many other passages, was not a word of disrespect.

MALONE.

It is scarcely used as a term of respect, when addressed by the King to Hotspur, p. 213. STARKENS.

⁷ — for the nonce,] That is, as I conceive, for the occasion. This phrase, which was very frequently, though not always very precisely, used by our old writers, I suppose to have been originally a corruption of corrupt Latin. From pro-nunc, I suppose, came for

P. HEN. But, I doubt, they will be too hard for us.

POINS. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turn'd back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured; and, in the reproof⁷ of this, lies the jest.

P. HEN. Well, I'll go with thee; provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night⁸ in Eastcheap, there I'll sup. Farewell.

POINS. Farewell, my lord. [Exit POINS.]

P. HEN. I know you all, and will a while uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness:
Yet herein will I imitate the sun;
Who doth permit the base contagious clouds⁹
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That, when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists the sun, and so for the mists; just as from ad-ven- came a-ven.

The Spanish entonces has been formed in the same manner from en-true. TYRWHITT.

For the weare is an expression in daily use amongst the common people in Suffolk, to signify a purpose; for the turn. HENLEY.

⁷ ——— reproof —] Reproof is reprobation. JOHNSON.

⁸ ——— to-morrow night —] I think we should read — to-night. The disguises were to be provided for the purpose of the robbery, which was to be committed at four in the morning; and they would come too late if the Prince was not to receive them till the night after the day of the exploit. This is a second instance to prove that Shakspeare could forget in the end of a scene what he had said in the beginning. STEVENS.

⁹ Who doth permit the base contagious clouds, &c.] So, in our author's 33d Sonnet:

Of vapours, that did seem to strangle him.²
 If all the year were playing holidays,
 To sport would be as tedious as to work;
 But, when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come,³
 And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.
 So, when this loose behaviour I throw off,
 And pay the debt I never promised,
 By how much better than my word I am,
 By so much shall I falsify men's hopes;⁴

"Full many a glorious morning have I seen

"Flatter the mountain-tops with sovereign eye,—

"Anon permit the base clouds to hide

"With ugly rack on his celestial face." MALONE.

² — vapours, that did seem to strangle him.] So, in Macbeth:

"And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp."

STEEVENS.

³ If all the year were playing holidays,

To sport would be as tedious as to work;

But, when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come,] So, in our author's 52d Sonnet:

"Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare,

"Since seldom coming, in the long year set,

"Like bones of worth they thinly placed are,

"Or captain jewels in the carcanet." MALONE.

⁴ — shall I falsify men's hopes;] To falsify hope is to exceed hope, to give much where men hoped for little.

This speech is very artfully introduced to keep the prince from appearing vile in the opinion of the audience; it prepares them for his future reformation; and, what is yet more valuable, exhibits a natural picture of a great mind offering excuses to itself, and palliating those follies which it can neither justify nor forsake.

JOHNSON.

Hope is used simply for expectations, as success is for the event, whether good or bad. This is still common in the midland counties. "Such manner of uncouth speech," (says Pottebam,) did the Tanner of Tamworth use in King Edward IV. which Tanner having a great while mistaken him, and used very broad talk with him, at length perceiving by his train that it was the king, was afraid he should be punished for it, and said thus, with a certain rude repentance: "I hope I shall be hanged to-morrow," for "I fear me I shall be hanged;" whereat the king laughed a good; not only

And, like bright metal on a sullen ground,¹
 My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
 Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
 Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
 I'll so offend, to make offence a skill;
 Redeeming time, when men think least I will.

[Exit.

to see the Tanner's vain feare, but also to hear his misshapen terme; and gave him for recompence of his good sport, the inheritance of Plumton Parke." P. 214. FARMER.

The following passage is the Second Part of K. Henry IV. fully supports Dr. Farmer's interpretation. The Prince is there, as in the passage before us, the speaker:

" My father is gone wild into his grave,—
 " And with his spirit sadly I survive,
 " To mock the expectations of the world;
 " To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
 " Rotten opinion, who hath written down
 " After my seeming." MALONE.

¹ — like bright metal on a sullen ground, &c.] So, in King Richard II.

" The fallen passage of thy weary steps
 " Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
 " The precious jewel of thy home return." STEEVENS.

SCENE III.

The same. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter King HENRY, NORTHUMBERLAND, WORCESTER, HOTSPUR, Sir WALTER BLUNT, and Others.

K. HEN. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And you have found me; for, accordingly,
You tread upon my patience: hut, be sure,
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition;³
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect,
Which the proud soul ne'er pays, hut to the proud.

³ I will from henceforth rather be myself,

Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition;] i. e. I will from henceforth rather put on the character that becomes me, and exert the resentment of an injured king, than still continue in the inactivity and mildness of my natural disposition. And this sentiment he has well expressed, save that by his usual licence, he puts the word condition for disposition. WARRINGTON.

The commentator has well explained the sense, which was not very difficult, but is mistaken in supposing the use of condition licentious. Shakspeare uses it very frequently for temper of mind, and in this sense the vulgar still say a good or ill-conditioned man. JOHNSON.

So, in K. Henry V. Act V: "Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth." Ben Jonson uses it in the same sense, in The New Inn, Act I, sc. vi:

"You cannot think me of that coarse condition,

"To envy you any thing." STEEVENS.

So also all the contemporary writers. See Vol. VIII. p. 22, n. 5; and 197, n. 8. MALONE.

WOR. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves

The scourge of greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness too which our own hands
Have help to make so portly.

NORTH. My lord,—

K. HEN. Worcester, get thee gone, for I see danger³

A disobedience in thine eye: O, fir,
Your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier of a servant brow.⁴
You have good leave⁵ to leave us; when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.—

[Exit WORCESTER.]

You were about to speak. [To NORTHUMBERLAND.]

NORTH. Yea, my good lord.

Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,
Were, as he says, not with such strength denied
As is deliver'd to your majesty:
Either envy, therefore, or misprision
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.

³ ——— I see danger—] Old copies—I do see, &c. STEEVENS.

⁴ And majesty might never yet endure

The moody frontier of a servant brow.] Frontier was anciently used for forehead. So Stubbs, in his Anatomy of Abuse, 1555:
“Then on the edges of their bolster'd hair, which borders coiled round their frontiers, and hanging over their faces,” &c.

STEEVENS.

And majesty might never yet endure, &c.] So, in K. Henry VIII

“The hearts of princes kiss obedience,

“So much they love it; but in stubborn spirits,

“They swell and grow as terrible as sinners.” MALONE.

⁵ You have good leave—] i. e. not ready assent. So, in K. John:

“Good leave, good Philip.”

See Vol. XI. p. 314, n. 9. STEEVENS.

HOT. My liege, I did deny no prisoners.
 But, I remember, when the fight was done,
 When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
 Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
 Came there a certain lord, neat, and trimly dress'd
 Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin, new reap'd,
 Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home:⁶
 He was perfum'd like a milliner;
 And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
 A pouncet-box,⁷ which ever and anon
 He gave his nose, and took't away again;——
 Who, therewith angry, when I next came there,
 Took it in snuff:⁸ — and still he smil'd, and talk'd;

⁶ — at harvest-home] That is, a time of festivity. JOHNSON.

If we understand harvest-home in the general sense of a time of festivity, we shall lose the most pointed circumstance of the comparison. A thin new shewe is compared to a stubble-land at harvest-home, not on account of the festivity of that season, as I apprehend, but because at that time, when the corn has been but just carried in, the stubble appears more even and upright, than at any other. TIRWHITT.

⁷ A pouncet box,] A small box for musk or other perfumes then in fashion; the lid of which, being cut with open work, gave it its name; from poinçonner, to prick, pierce, or engrave.

WARBURTON.
 Dr. Warburton's explanation is just. At the christening of Queen Elizabeth, the Marchioness of Dorset gave, according to Holinshed, "three gilt bowls peruced, with a cover."

So also, in Gawin Douglas's Translation of the ninth Æneid:

"—— wrought richly curiously

"With figures grave, and passet ymagery." STEEVENS.⁹

⁸ Took it in snuff:] Snuff is equivocally used for anger, and a powder taken up the nose.

So, in The Flirt, a comedy by E. Sharpham, 1610: "Nay be not angry; I do not touch thy nose, to the end it should take any thing in snuff."

Again, in Decker's Satiromastix, 1602:

"—— 'tis enough.

"Having so much fool, to take him in snuff;"

And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
 He call'd them — untaught knaves, unmannerly,
 To bring a slovenly unhandsome corse
 Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
 With many holiday and lady terms ²
 He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
 My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf
 I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
 To be so pester'd with a popinjay, ³ and here they are talking about tobacco. Again, in Hinde's Elieffs Libidinoso, 1606: "The good wife glad that he took the matter so in snuff," &c. STEEVENS.

See Vol. VII. p. c57, n. 6. MALONE.

² With many holiday and lady terms — } So, in A Looking Glass for London and England, 1598: "These be but holiday terms, but if you heard her working day words —," Again, in The Merry Wives of Windsor: " — he speaks holiday," STEEVENS.

³ I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
 To be so pester'd with a popinjay, } But in the beginning of the speech he represents himself at this time not as cold but hot, and inflamed with rage and labour:

"When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil," &c.

I am therefore persuaded that Shakspeare wrote and pointed it thus:

I then all smarting with my wounds; being gall'd

To be so pester'd with a popinjay, &c. WARBURTON.

Whatever Percy might say of his rage and toil, which is merely declamatory and apologetical, his wounds would at this time be certainly cold, and when they were cold would smart, and not before. If any alteration were necessary, I should transpose the lines

I then all smarting with my wounds being cold,

Out of my grief, and my impatience,

To be so pester'd with a popinjay,

Answer'd eagerly.

The same transposition had been proposed by Mr. Edwards, in John Alday's Summary of secret Weeders, &c. bl. l. no date, we are told that "The Popinjay can speak humane speech, they come from the Indies" &c.

From the following passage in The Northern Lass, 1632, it should seem, however, that a popinjay and a parrot were distinct birds:

"Is this a parrot or a popinjay?"

He would himself have been a soldier.
 This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord,
 I answer'd indirectly, as I said;
 And, I beseech you, let not his report
 Come current for an accusation,
 Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

BLUNT. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord,

Whatever Harry Percy then had said,
 To such a person, and in such a place,
 At such a time, with all the rest retold,
 May reasonably die, and never rise
 To do him wrong, or any way impeach;
 What then he said, so he unsay it now.⁴

K. HEN. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners;
 But with proviso, and exception, —
 That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
 His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;⁵

⁴ To do him wrong, or any way impeach;

What then he said, so he unsay it now.] Let what he then said never rise to impeach him, so he unsay it now. JOHNSON.

⁵ His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;] Shakspeare has fallen into some contradictions with regard to this Lord Mortimer. Before he makes his personal appearance in the play, he is repeatedly spoken of as Hotspur's brother-in-law. In Act II. Lady Percy expressly calls him her brother Mortimer. And yet when he enters in the third act, he calls Lady Percy his aunt, which in fact she was, and not his sister. This inconsistency may be accounted for as follows. It appears both from Dugdale's and Sandford's account of the Mortimer family, that there were two of them taken prisoners at different times by Glendower, each of them bearing the name of Edmund; one being Edmund earl of March, nephew to Lady Percy, and the proper Mortimer of this play; the other, Sir Edmund Mortimer, uncle to the former, and brother to Lady Percy. Shakspeare confounds the two persons. STEEVENS.

Another cause also may be assigned for this confusion. Henry Percy, according to the accounts of our old historians, married Eleanor, the sister of Roger Earl of Merch, who was the father of the Edmund Earl of Merch that appears in the present play. But

Who, on my soul, hath wilfully betray'd
 The lives of those, that he did lead to fight Against the great magician, damn'd Glendower;
 Whose daughter, as we hear, the earl of March Hath lately married. Shall our coffers then
 Be emptied, to redeem a traitor home?
 Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears,^c

this Edmund had a sister likewise named Eleanor. Shakspeare might therefore have at different times confounded these two Eleanors. In fact, however, the sister of Roger Earl of March, whom young Percy married, was called Elizabeth. MALONE.

See my note on Act II. sc. iii. where this Lady is called—Kate.

STEVENS.

^c — and indent with fears.] The reason why he says, bugaro and article with fears, meaning with Mortimer, is, because he supposed Mortimer had wilfully betrayed his own force to Glendower out of fear, as appears from his next speech. WARBURTON.

The difficulty seems to me to arise from this, that the king is not debased in article or contract with Mortimer, but with another for Mortimer. Perhaps we may read:

Shall we buy treason! as i indent with peers

When they have lost and forfeited themselves?

Shall we purchase back a traitor? Shall we descend to a composition with Worcester, Northumberland, and young Percy, who by disobedience have lost and forfeited their honours and themselves?

JOHNSON.

Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears,] This verb is used by Harrington in his translation of Ariosto. Book XVI. st. 33:

"And with the lish bands he hith indents,

"To spoil their lodgings and to burn their tents."

Again, in The Cival Brother, by Sir W. D'Avenant, 1630:

"— Dost thou indent

"With my acceptance, make choice of services?"

Fears may, be used in the active sense for terrors. So, in the second part of this play:

"— all those bold fears

"Thou see'st with peril I have answered."

These lords, however, had, as yet, neither forfeited or lost any thing, so that Dr. Johnson's conjecture is inadmissible.

After all, I am inclined to regard Mortimer (though the King affects to speak of him in the plural number) as the Fear, or timid object, which had lost or forfeited itself. Henry afterwards says:

"— he durst as well have met the devil alone.

"As Owen Glendower for an enemy."

When they have lost and forfeited themselves;
 No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
 For I shall never hold that man my friend,
 Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
 To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

HOT. Revolted Mortimer!

He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
 But by the chance of war;⁵—To prove that true,
 Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
 Those mouthed wounds,⁷ which valiantly he took,

Indrat with fears, may therefore mean, figs as indenture or compact with daftards. Fears may be fubftituted for fearful people, as wrengs has been ufed for wrengers to K. Richard II.

"He fhould have found his uncle Gaunt a father,

"To rouse his wrengs, and chafe them to a bay."

"Near Cæfar's angel (fays the Soothfayer to Antony) thy own becomer a frat," i. e. a fpirit of cowardice, and Sir Richard Vernon, in the play before us, ufes an expreffion that nearly refembles indrating with fears:

"I hold as little maafel with weak frat,

"As you, my lord——"

The King, by boying trafca, and indrating with fears, may therefore covertly repeat both his pretended charges againft Mortimer; firft, that he had treafonably betrayed his party to Glendower; and, fecondly, that he would have been afraid to encounter with fo brave an adverfary. STEEVENS.

⁵ He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,

But by the chance of war;] The meaning is, he came out into the enemy's power but by the chance of war. The King charged Mortimer, that he wilfully betrayed his army, and, as he was then with the enemy, calls him revolted Mortimer. Hotfpur replies, that he never fell off, that is, fell into Glendower's hands, but by the chance of war. I fhould not have explained thus teftoufly a paffage fo hard to be miftaken, but that two editors have already miftaken it. JOHNSON.

⁷ ——— To prove that true,

Needs no more but one tongue for all thofe wounds, &c.] Hotfpur calls Mortimer's wounds mouthed, from their gaping like a mouth; and fays, that to prove his loyalty, but one tongue was neceffary for all thefe mouths. This may be harfh; but the fame idea occurs in Cælius, where one of the populace fays: "For if he fhows

When on the gentle Severn's sedgey bank,
 In single opposition, hand to hand,
 He did confound the best part of an hour
 In changing hardiment ⁶ with great Glendower:
 Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink,⁹

Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
 Who then, affrighted ⁸ with their bloody looks;
 Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
 And hid his crisp head ⁵ in the hollow bank us his wounds, we are to put 'our tongues into these wounds, and speak for them."

And again, in Julius Cæsar, Antony says:

"there were an Antony,

"Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue

"In every wound of Cæsar, that should move," &c.

M. MASON.

⁶ — hardiment.—] An obsolete word, signifying hardiness, bravery, stoutness. Spenser is frequent in his use of it.

STEVENS.

⁹ — three times did they drink.] It is the property of wounds to excite the most impatient thirst. The poet therefore hath with exquisite propriety introduced this circumstance, which may serve to place in its proper light the dying kindness of Sir Philip Sydney; who, though suffering the extremity of thirst from the agony of his own wounds, yet, notwithstanding, gave up his own draught of water to a wounded soldier. HENLEY.

⁸ Woe then, affrighted &c.] This passage has been censured as sounding nonsensical, which represents a stream of water as capable of fear. It is misunderstood. Severn is here not the flood, but the tutelary power of the flood, who was affrighted, and hid his head in the hollow bank. JOHNSON.

⁵ — his crisp head.—] Crisp is curled. So, Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Maid of the Mill:

"methinks the river,

"As he steals by, curls up his head to view you."

Again, in Kyd's Cornelia, 1595:

"O beauteous Liber, with thine easy streams,

"That glide as smoothly as a Parthian shaf,

"Turn and thy crispy tides, like silver curls,

"Back to thy grass-green banks to welcome us?"

P 2

Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
 Never did bare and rotten policy⁴
 Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
 Nor never could the noble Mortimer
 Receive so many, and all willingly:
 Then let him not be slander'd with revolt.

K. HEN. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost belie him,
 He never did encounter with Glendower;
 I tell thee,
 He durst as well have met the devil alone,
 As Owen Glendower for an enemy.

Perhaps Shakspeare has bestowed an epithet, applicable only to the stream of water, on the genius of the stream. The following passage, however, in the sixth Song of Dryden's Polixenon, may seem to justify its propriety:

"Your courses were dissolv'd into that crystal stream;
 "Your curls to curl'd waves, which plainly still appear
 "The same in water now that once in locks they were."

Beaumont and Fletcher have the same image with Shakspeare in The Loyal Subject:

"— the Volga trembled at his terror,
 "And hid his seven curl'd heads."

Again, in one of Ben Jonson's Masques:

"The rivers run as smoothed by his hand,
 "Only their heads are cuffed by his stroke."

See Vol. VI. (Whalley's edit.) p. 26. STEEVENS.

⁴ Never did bare and rotten policy.—] All the quartos which I have seen read bare in this place. The first folio, and all the subsequent editions, have last. I believe bare is right: "Never did policy, lying open to detection, so colour its workings."

JOHNSON.

The first quarto, 1598, reads last; which means so thinly covered by art as to be safely seen through. So, in Venus and Adonis:

"What last excuses mak'st thou to be gone!" MALONE.

Since there is such good authority as Johnson informs us, for reading bare, in this passage, instead of last, the former word should certainly be adopted. Bare policy, that is, policy lying open to detection, is in truth no policy at all. The epithet bare, also best agrees with rotten. M. JASON.

Art not^d ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth
 Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer:
 Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
 Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
 As will displease you.—My lord Northumberland,
 We licence your departure with your son:—
 Send us your prisoners, or you'll hear of it.

[Exeunt King HENRY, BLUNT, and Train.]

HOT. And if the devil come and roar for them,
 I will not send them:—I will after straight,
 And tell him so; for I will ease my heart,
 Although it be with hazard of my head.

NORTH. What, drunk with choler? flay, and pause awhile;
 Here comes your uncle.

Re-enter WORCESTER.

HOT. Speak of Mortimer?
 'Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul
 Want mercy, if I do not join with him:
 Yea, on his part, I'll empty all these veins,
 And shed my dear blood drop by drop i'the dust,
 But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
 As high i'the air as this unthankful king,
 As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.

NORTH. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad. [To WORCESTER.]

WOR. Who struck this heat up after I was gone?

HOT. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners;
 And when I urg'd the ransom once again
 Of my wife's brother, then his cheek look'd pale;

^d Art not.—] Old copies—Art thou not. STEEVENS.

And on my face he turn'd an eye of death,⁵
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

WOR. I cannot blame him: Was he not proclaim'd,
By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?⁶

NORTH. He was; I heard the proclamation:
And then it was, when the unhappy king
(Whose wrongs in us God pardon!) did set forth

⁵ — an eye of death,] That is, an eye menacing death. Hotspur seems to describe the king as trembling with rage rather than fear. JOHNSON.

So, in Malloze's Tambrulaine, 1590:

"And wraps in silence of his angry soul,

"Upon his browes was pourtrayd ugly death,

"And in his eyes the furies of his heart." STEVENS.

Johnson and Steevens seem to think that Hotspur meant to describe the King as trembling not with fear, but rage; but surely they are mistaken. The king had no reason to be enraged at Mortimer, who had been taken prisoner in fighting against his enemy; but he had much reason to fear the man who had a better title to the crown than himself, which had been proclaimed by Richard II; and accordingly, when Hotspur is informed of that circumstance, he says,

"Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king

"That with'd him on the barren monument bar'd."

And Worcester, in the very next line, says: "He cannot blame him for trembling at the name of Mortimer, since Richard had proclaimed him next of blood." M. MASON.

Mr. M. Mason's remark is, I think, in general just; but the King, as appears from this scene, had some reason to be enraged also at Mortimer, because he thought that Mortimer had not been taken prisoner by the efforts of his enemies, but had himself revolted.

MALONE.

⁶ — Was he not proclaim'd,

By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?] Roger Mortimer, earl of March, who was born in 1351, was declared heir apparent to the crown in the 9th year of King Richard II. (1385). See Grafton, p. 347. But he was killed in Ireland in 1398. The person who was proclaimed by Richard heir apparent to the crown, previous to his last voyage to Ireland, was Edmund Mortimer, (the son of Roger,) who was then but seven years old; but he was not Percy's wife's brother, but her nephew. MALONE.

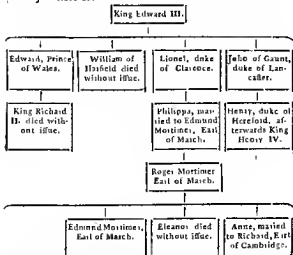

Upon his Irish expedition;
 From whence he, intercepted, did return
 To be depos'd, and, shortly, murdered.

Wor. And for whose death, we in the world's wide mouth
 Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of.

Hot. But, soft, I pray you; Did king Richard
 then

Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer
 Heir o the crown?

⁷ Heir to the crown?] Edmond Mortimer, earl of March, was the undoubted heir to the crown after the death of Richard, as appears from the following table; in which the three younger children of King Edward III. are not included, as being immaterial to the subject before us:

Stedford in his Genealogical History says, that the last mentioned Edmund, earl of March, (the Mortimer of this play,) was married to Anne Stafford, daughter of Edmund, earl of Stafford.

NORTH. He did; myself did hear it.

HOT. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king,
That wish'd him on the barren mountains starv'd
But shall it be, that you.—that set the crown
Up on the head of this forgetful man;
And, for his sake, wear the detested blot
Of murd'rous subornation,—shall it be,
That you a world of curses undergo;
Being the agents or base second means,
The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?—
O, pardon me, that I descend so low,
To show the line, and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king.—
Shall it, for shame, be spoken in these days,
Or fill up chronicles in time to come,
That men of your nobility and power,
Did 'gage them both in an unjust behalf,—
As both of you, God pardon it! have done,—
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,

Thomas Walsingham asserts that he married a daughter of Owen Glendower; and the subsequent historians copied him; but this is a very doubtful point, for the Welsh writers make no mention of it. Sandford says that this earl of March was confined by the jealous Henry to the castle of Trim in Ireland, and that he died there, after an imprisonment of twenty years, on the 19th of January, 1424. But this is a mistake. There is no proof that he was confined a state-prisoner by King Henry the Fourth, and he was employed in many military services by his son Henry the Fifth. He died in his own castle at Trim in Ireland, at the time mentioned by Sandford, but not in a state of imprisonment. See note on King Henry VI. P. II. A.D. II. sc. ii. Vol. XIV.

Since the original note was written, I have learned that Owen Glendower's daughter was married to his antagonist Lord Gray of Ruthven. Holinshed led Shakspeare into the error of supposing her the wife of Edmund Mortimer, earl of March. This nobleman, who is the Mortimer of the present play, was born in November, 1392, and consequently at the time when this play commences, was little more than ten years old. The Prince of Wales was not fifteen. MALONE.

And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke?²
 And shall it, in more shame, be further spoken,
 That you are fool'd, discarded, and shok off
 By him, for whom these shames ye underwent?
 No; yet time serves wherein you may redeem
 Your banish'd honours, and restore yourselves
 Into the good thoughts of the world again;
 Revenge the jeering, and disdain'd³ contempt,
 Of this proud king; who studies, day and night,
 To answer all the debt he owes to you,
 Even with the bloody payment of your deaths.
 Therefore, I say,—

WOR. Peace, cousin, say no more;
 And now I will unclasp a secret book,
 And to your quick-conceiving discontents
 I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
 As full of peril, and advent'rous spirit,
 As to o'er-walk a current, roaring loud,
 On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.⁴

HOR. If he fall in, good night:—or sink or swim;⁵—
 Send danger from the east unto the west,
 So honour cross it from the north to south,

² —this canker, Bolingbroke?] The canker-rose is the dog-rose, the flower of the Cynobaton. So, in Much ado about Nothing: "I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his grace." STEEVENS.

³ —disdain'd —] For disdainful. JOHNSON.

⁴ On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.] That is, of a spear laid across. WARBURTON.

⁵ —sink or swim:] This is a very ancient proverbial expression. So, in The Knight's Tale of Chaucer, Mr. Tyrwhitt's edit. v. 1399:

"No receiveth never, whether I sink or flete."

Again, in The longer thou livest the more Fool thou art, 1570:

"He careth not who doth sink or swimme." STEEVENS.

And let them grapple;—O! the blood more firs,
To rouse a lion, than to start a hare.³

NORTH. Imagination of some great exploit
Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

HOT. By heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap,
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon;⁴

³ ———— *the blood more firs,
To rouse a lion, than to start a hare.*] This passage will remind the classical reader of young Ascanius's heroic feelings in the fourth Æneid:

——— *procora intus incutit volis
Optat aprum, aut fulvum descendere monte leonem.* SYRRENS.

⁴ *By heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap,
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon;*] Though I am very far from condemning this speech with Gildon and Theobald, as absolute madness, yet I cannot find in it that profundity of reflection, and beauty of allegory which Dr. Warburton has endeavoured to display. This fall of Hotspur, may be, I think, sobriely and rationally vindicated as the violent eruption of a mind inflated with ambition and fired with resentment; as the boasted clamour of a man able to do much, and eager to do more; as the hasty motion of turbulent desire; as the dark expression of indetermined thoughts. The passage from Euripides is surely not allegorical, yet it is produced, and properly, as parallel. JOHNSON.

Euripides has put the very same sentiment into the mouth of Eteocles: "I will not, madam, disguise my thought; I would scale heaven, I would descend to the very entrails of the earth, if so be that by that price I could obtain a kingdom.

WARBURTON.

This is probably a passage from some bombast play, and alterwards used as a common burlesque phrase for attempting impossibilities. At least, that is what the last, might be concluded from its use in Cartwright's poem On Mr. Stokes his Book on the Art of Vaulting, edit. 1651, p. 212r

"Then go thy way, brave Will, for one;

"By Jove 'tis thou must leap, or none,

"To pluck bright honour from the moon."

Unless Cartwright intended to ridicule this passage in Shakspeare, which I partly suspect. Stokes's book, a noble object for the wit, was printed at London, in the year 1647. T. WARTON.

A passage somewhat resembling this, occurs in Archbishop Parker's
Address to the Reader, prefixed to his Treatise entitled A Brief Ex-

Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,⁵
And pluck up drowned honour by the locks;
So he, that doth redeem her thence, might wear,
Without corrival, all her dignities:
But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!⁶

amination for the Tyme, &c.—"But truth is to hye fat, for you to pluck her out of heaven, to manifestlye knowne to be by your papers obscured, and surely stablished, to drowne her in the myrie lakes of your sophistricall writings."

In The Knight of the burning Pestle, Beaumont and Fletcher have put the foregoing part of Hotspur into the mouth of Ralph the apothecary, who, like Bottom, appears to have been food of ading paris to tear a sat in. I suppose a ridicule on Shakspeare was designed. STEEVENS.

⁵ Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,] Sb, in The Tempest;

"I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet sounded."

STEEVENS.

⁶ But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!] A coat is said to be fac'd, when part of it, as the sleeves or bosom, is covered with something finer or more splendid than the main substance. The mantua-makers still use the word, Half-fac'd fellowship is then "partnership but half-adorned, partnership which yet wants half the show of dignities and honours." JOHNSON.

So, in The Portraiture of Hypocrisis, &c. bl. l. 138g: "A gentleman should have a gowne for the oight, two for the daie, &c. one all furred, another half-fac'd."

Mr. M. Mason, however, observes, that the allusion may be to the half-faces on medals, where two persons are represented. "The coins of Philip and Mary (says he) rendered this image sufficiently familiar to Shakspeare." STEEVENS.

I doubt whether the allusion was to dies. Half-fac'd seems to have meant paltry. The expression, which appears to have been a contemptuous one, I believe, had its rise from the meagre denominations of coin, on which, formerly, only a profile of the reigning prince was exhibited; whereas on the more valuable pieces a full face was represented. So, in King John:

"With that half-face would he have all my land,—

"A half-fac'd great, five hundred pound a year!"

WOR. He apprehends a world of figures here,⁶
But not the form of what he should attend.—
Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

HOT. I cry you mercy.

WOR. Those same noble Scots,
That are your prisoners,——

HOT. I'll keep them all;
By heaven, he shall not have a Scot of them:
No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not:
I'll keep them, by this hand.

WOR. You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes.—
Those prisoners you shall keep.

HOT. Nay, I will; that's flat:—
He said, he would not ransom Mortimer;
Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer;
But I will find him when he lies asleep,
And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!

But then, it will be said, "what becomes of fellowship? Where is the fellowship to a single face in profile? The allusion must be to the coins of Philip and Mary, where two faces were in part exhibited."—This squaring of our author's comparisons, and making them correspond precisely on every side, is in my apprehension the source of endless mistakes. See p. 226, n. 9. Fellowship relates to Hotspur's "cortival" and himself, and I think to nothing more.

I find the epithet here applied to us, in Nath's Apologie of Pierce Pennesse, 1593: "——with all other odd ends of your half-faced English." Again, in Hibernensis, 1610:

"Whilst I behold you half-fac'd misdoers,——" MALONE.

⁶ —a world of figures here.] Figures is here used equivocally. As it is applied to Hotspur's speech it is a rhetorical mode; as opposed to form, it means appearance or shape. JOHNSON.

Figures mean shapes created by Hotspur's imagination; but not the form of what he should attend, viz. of what his uncle had to propose. EDWARDS.

⁷ He said, he would not ransom Mortimer:——

But I will find him when he lies asleep,

And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!] So Marlowe, in his King Edward II:

Nay,
I'll have a starling shall be taught to speak
Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him,
To keep his anger still in motion.

WOR. Hear you,
Cousin; a word.

HOT. All studies here I solemnly defy,*
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke;
And that same sword-and-buckler prince of Wales,†—

But that I think his father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I'd have him poison'd with a pot of ale.‡

"—and if he will not assassinate him,

"I'll thunder such a peal into his ears,

"As ever subject did unto his king." MALONE.

* —[I solemnly defy.] One of the ancient senses of the verb, to defy, was to refuse. So, in Romeo and Juliet;

"I do defy thy commiseration." STEVENS.

† And that same sword-and-buckler prince of Wales.] A royster or turbulent fellow, that fought in taverns, or raised disorders in the streets, was called a Swash-buckler. In this sense sword-and-buckler is here used. JOHNSON.

Stowe will keep us to the precise meaning of the epithet here given to the prince.—"This field, commonly called West Smith-field, was for many years called Rushbury Hall, by reason it was the usual place of hayes and common fighting, during the time that sword and bucklers were in use. When every servant-man, from the base to the best, carried a buckler at his back, which hung by the hilt or pomel of his sword." HENLEY.

I have now before me (to confirm the justice of this remark) a poem entitled "Sword and Buckler, or Serving Man's Defence," By William Bae, 1602. STEVENS.

"What weapons bear they?—Some sword and dagger, some sword and buckler.—What weapon is that buckler?—A clownish dastardly weapon, and not fit for a gentleman." Florio's First Fruits, 1578. MALONE.

‡ —[poison'd with a pot of ale.] Dr. Grey supposes this to be said in allusion to Caxton's Account of King John's Death; (see Caxton's First Temporal, 1515, fol. 62.) but I rather think it

WOR. Farewell, kinsman! I will talk to you,
When you are better temper'd to attend.

NORTH. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool!

has reference to the low company (drinkets of ale) with whom the poore spent so much of his time in the meanest taverns.

STEVENS.

³ Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool—] Thus the quarto, 1598; and surely it affords a more obvious meaning than the folio, which reads: —wasp-tongued. That Shakspeare knew the sting of a wasp was not situated in its mouth, may be learned from the following passage in The Winter's Tale, Act I. sc. ii:
" — it goads, thorns, nettles, tails of wasps." STEVENS.

This reading is confirmed by Hotspur's reply:

" Why look you, I am whipp'd and scourg'd with rods;

" Neuled and stung with pismires, when I hear

" Of this vile poltroon, Bolingbroke." M. MASON.

The first quarto copies of several of these plays are in many respects much preferable to the folio, and in general I have paid the utmost attention to them. In the present instance, however, I think the transcriber's ear deceived him, and that the true reading is that of the second quarto, 1599, wasp-tongued, which I have adopted, not on the authority of that copy, (for it has none,) but because I believe it to have been the word used by the author. The folio was apparently printed from a later quarto; and the editor from ignorance of our author's phraseology changed wasp-tongued to wasp-stung. There are other instances of the same unwarrantable alterations even in that valuable copy of our author's plays. The change, I say, was made from ignorance of Shakspeare's phraseology; for in King Richard III. we have—his venom-tooth, not venom'd- tooth; your widow-doulour, not widow'd-doulour; and in another play,—parted with sugar-breath, not sugar'd-breath; and many more instances of the same kind may be found. Thus, in this play, —smooth-tongue, not smooth-tongued. Again: " — stole from my host at St. Alban's, or the red-roose innkeeper of Daintrey."
[not red-roose.] Again, in King Richard III.

" Some light-foot friend post to the Duke of Norfolk."
not light-footed.

So also, in The Black Book, 4to. 1604: " — The spindle-shank spyder, which showed like great learners with little legs, went stealing over his head," &c. In the last act of The Second Part of King Henry IV. "blew-bottle tongue" (the reading of the quarto) is changed by the editor of the folio to "blew-bottled tongue;" as he here substituted wasp-tongued for wasp tongue.

Art thou, to break into this woman's mood;
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own?

Shakspeare certainly knew, as Mr. Steevens has observed, that the sting of a wasp lay in his tail; nor is there in my apprehension any thing knuckled under the epithet wasp-tongue, inconsistent with that knowledge. It means only, having a tongue as peevish and mischievous (if such terms may be applied to that instrument of the mind) as a wasp. Thus, in As you Like it, waspish is used without any particular reference to any action of a wasp, but merely as synonymous to peevish or frivolous:

"By the stern brow and waspish action

"Which she did use as she was writing of it,

"It bears an angry tennur."

In The Tempest, when Iris speaking of Venus, says,

"Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows,"

the meaning is perfectly clear; yet the objection that Shakspeare knew the sting of a wasp was in his tail, not in his head, might, I conceive, be made with equal force, there, as on the present occasion.

Though this note has run out to an unreasonable length, I must add a passage in The Taming of the Shrew; which, while it shows that our author knew the sting of a wasp was really situated in its tail, proves at the same time that he thought it might with propriety be applied metaphorically to the tongue.

"Pet. Come, come, you wasp; I'faith you are too angry.

"Cath. If I be waspish, best beware my sting.

"Pet. My remedy is then to pluck it out.

"Cath. Ay, if the fool could find out where it lies.

"Pet. Who knows not where a wasp does wear his sting?

"In his tail.

"Cath. In his tongue.

"Pet. Whose tongue?

"Cath. Yours, if you talk of tails," &c.

This passage appears to me fully to justify the reading that I have chosen. Independent however of all authority, or reference to other passages, it is supported by the context here. A person stung by a wasp would not be very likely to claim all the task in himself, as Hotspur is described to do, but rather in the agony of pain to implore the assistance of those about him; whereas "the wasp-tongued fool" may well be supposed to "break into a woman's mood," and to listen "to no tongue but his own."

Mr. M. Mason thinks that the words afterwards used by Hotspur are decisively in favour of wasp-stung.—"Nertled and stung with gismires;" but Hotspur uses that expression to mark the poignancy

HOT. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourg'd with rods.

Nettled, and stung with pismires, when I hear
Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.
In Richard's time,—What do you call the place?—
A plague upon't!—it is in Gloucestershire;—
'Twas where the mad-cap duke his uncle kept;
His uncle York;—where I first bow'd my knee
Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke,
When you and he came back from Ravenspurgh.

NORTH. At Berkley castle.

HOT. You say true:—

Why, what a candy deal of courtesy⁴
This fawning greybound then did proffer me!
Look,—when his infant fortune came to age,⁵—
And,—gentle Harry Percy,—and, kind cousin
O, the devil take such cozeners!⁶—God forgive me!—

Good uncle, tell your tale, for I have done.

of his own feelings; Northumberland uses the term waspy-tongue to denote the irritability of his son's temper, and the petulance of his language. MALONE.

I may seem to be overlaid by the foregoing note, but do not think myself defeated. The reader's patience, however, shall be no further exercised on the present occasion. STEEVENS.

⁴ —what a candy deal of courtesy—] i. e. what a deal of candy courtesy. Mr. Pope and the subsequent editors read—candy'd, without necessity. See also K. Richard III.

"Grossly grew captive to his honey words." not honey'd words. See the last note. MALONE.

⁵ —infant fortune came to age,] Alluding to what passed in King Richard, Act II. sc. iii. JOHNSON.

⁶ —the devil take such cozeners!] The same jingle occurs in Two Tragedies in One, &c. 1601:

"Come pretty cousin, cozened by grim death."

Again, in Monsieur Thomas, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

"———cousin,

"Cozen thyself no more."

Again, in The Downfall of Robert Earl of Huntington, 1601:

"To see my cousin cozen'd in this sort." STEEVENS.

WOR. Nay, if you have not, to't again;
We'll stay your leisure.

HOT. I have done, i'faith.

WOR. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners,
Deliver them up without their ransom straight,
And make the Douglas' son your only mean
For powers in Scotland; which,—for divers reasons,

Which I shall send you written,—be assur'd;
Will easily be granted.—You, my lord,—

[To NORTHUMBERLAND:

Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd.—
Shall secretly into the bosom creep
Of that same noble prelate, well belov'd,
The archbishop.

HOT. Of York, is't not?

WOR. True; who bears hard
His brother's death at Bristol, the lord Scroop.
I speak not this in estimation,¹
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down;
And only stays but to behold the face
Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

HOT. I smell it; upon my life, it will do well.

NORTH. Before the game's afoot, thou still let'st slip.²

HOT. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot:—
And then the power of Scotland, and of York,—
To join with Mortimer, ha?

¹ I speak not this in estimation,] Estimation for conjecture.

WARBURTON.

² —let'st slip.] To let slip, is to loose the greyhound.

JOHNSON.

So, in The Taming of a Shrew:

"Lucentio slipp'd me, like his greyhound." STEEVENS.

VOL. XII.

Q

WOR. And so they shall.

HOT. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.

WOR. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,
To save our heads by raising of a head:*

For, bear ourselves as even as we can,

The king will always think him in our debt;†

And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,

Till he hath found a time to pay us home.

And see already, how he doth begin

To make us strangers to his looks of love.

HOT. He does, he does; we'll be reveng'd on him.

WOR. Cousin,‡ farewell:—No further go in this,
Than I by letters shall direct your course.

When time is ripe, (which will be suddenly.)

I'll steal to Glendower, and lord Mortimer;

Where you and Douglas, and our powers at once,

(As I will fashion it,) shall happily meet,

To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms.

Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

NORTH. Farewell, good brother: We shall thrive,
I trust.

HOT. Uncle, adieu:—O, let the hours be short,
Till fields, and blows, and groans applaud our sport!

[Exeunt.]

* — by raising of a head:] A head is a body of forces.

JOHNSON.

So, in King Henry VI. P. III:

" Making another head, to fight again." STEEVENA.

† The king will always &c.] This is a natural description of the state of mind between those that have conferred, and those that have received obligations too great to be satisfied.

That this would be the event of Northumberland's disloyalty, was predicted by King Richard in the former play. JOHNSON.

‡ Cousin,] This was a common address in our author's time to nephews, nieces, and grandchildren. See Holinshed's Chronicle, passim. Hotspur was Worcester's nephew. MALONE.

Engraved by J. M. W. Turner R. A.

Engraved by J. M. W. Turner R. A.

SHAKESPEARE

R. Malice your loving nephews were is mine First Part of P1 My noble uncle thus gently said.
My noble Plantagenet my friend 'as he was King Henry's 6th Your nephews late deposed Richard comes ACT II SCENE V.

ACT II. SCENE I.

Rochester. An Inn Yard.

Enter a Carrier, with a lantern in his hand.

1 CAR. Heigh ho! An't be not four by the day,
I'll be bang'd: Charles' wain³ is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not pack'd. What, ostler!

OST. [Within.] Anon, anon.

1 CAR. I pry'thee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle,⁴ put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cefs.⁵

Enter another Carrier.

2 CAR. Pease and beans are as dank⁶ here as a

³ ——— Charles' wain. —] Charles' wain is the vulgar name given to the constellation called the Bear. It is a corruption of the Charles or Charles' wain (Sax. cearl, a countryman.) RITSON.

See also Thoresby's Leeds, p. 268. REED.

Cearl is frequently used for a countryman in old books.
⁴ Here begynneth the charls and the byrde, "printed for Wynkyn de Worde." See also the Glossaries of Skinner and Junius, v. Charl.
DOUCE.

⁵ ——— Cut's saddle.] Cut is the name of a horse in The Witch's of Lancashire, 1634, and, I suppose, was a common one.

STEVENS.

See Vol. V. p. 283, n. 3. MALONE.

⁶ ——— out of all cefs.] i. e. out of all measure: the phrase being taken from a cefs, tax, or subsidy, which being by regular and moderate rates, when any thing was exorbitant, or out of measure, it was said to be, out of all cefs. WARBURTON.

⁷ ——— as dank. —] i. e. wet, rotten. POPE.

To the directions given by Sir Thomas Bodley, for the preservation of his library, he orders that the cleanser thereof should;

dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots: ' this house is turn'd upside down, since Robin ostler died.

1 CAR. Poor fellow! never joy'd since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

2 CAR. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fleas: I am stung like a tench.⁶

1 CAR. Like a tench? by the mass, there is ne'er a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

" at least twice a quarter, with clean cloths, strike away the dust and mending of the books, which will not then continue long with it; now it proceedeth chiefly of the newness of the foretels, which in time will be less and less daasigh." Reliquie Bogtiazar, p. 111.

REED,

7 — bots:] Are worms in the stomach of a boise.

JOHNSON.

" The bottes is an yll disease, and they lye in a hulse mawe; and they be an inche long, white coloured, and a reed heed, and as much as a syngers ende; and they be quicke and flycke faste in the mawe syde: it apperethe by stumpyng of the horse or tumblyng; and in the beginninge there is remedy ymonghe; and if they be not cured betyme, they wyll eate thorough his mawe and kyll hym." Fitcherbert's Booke of Husbandry. RETRO.

A bots light upon you, is an imprecation frequently repeated in the anonymous play of K. Henry V. as well as in many other old pieces. So, in the ancient black letter interlude of The Disobedient Child, no date:

" That I wished their bellies full of bottes."

In Reginald Scott, on Wittcraft, 1584, is " a charme for the bots in a boise." STEVENS.

⁶ I am stung like a tench.] Why like a tench? I know not, unless the similitude consists in the spots of the tench, and those made by the bite of vermin. MALONE.

I have either read, or been told, that it was once customary to pack such pond-fish as were brought alive to market, in stinging-nettles. But writing from recollection, and having no proof of this usage to offer, I do not press my intelligence on the public.

STEVENS.

2 CAR. Why, they will allow us ne'er a jorden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach.*

1 CAR. What, oſſler! come away, and be hang'd, come away.

2 CAR. I have a gammon of bacon, and two razes of ginger,² to be delivered as far as Charing-croſs.

* — breeds fleas like a loach.] The loach is a very ſmall fiſh, but ſo exceedingly prolifick that it is ſeldom found without ſpawn in it; and it was formerly a practice of the young galleons to ſwallow loaches in wine, becauſe they were conſidered as invigorating, and as apt to communicate their prolifick quality. The carrier therefore means to ſay that “your chamber-lie breeds fleas as faſt as a loach” breeds, not fleas, but loaches.

In As you like it, Jaques ſays that he “can ſuck melancholy out of a ſong, as a weaſel ſucks eggs;” but he does not mean that a weaſel ſucks eggs “out of a ſong.”—And ſo Trinides and Creſſida, where Neſſor ſays that Theſites is “A ſlave whoſe gall coins ſlanders like a mint,” he means, that his gall coined ſlanders as faſt as a mint coins mouſey. M. MASON.

A paſſage in Carialano likewise may be produced in ſupport of the interpretation here given: “—and he no more remembers his mother, than an eight-year-old horſe;” i. e. than an eight-year-old horſe remembers his dam.

I entirely agree with Mr. M. Maſon in his explanation of this paſſage, and, before I had ſeen his COMMENTS, had in the ſame manner interpreted a paſſage in As you like it. See Vol. VIII. p. 243, n. 7. One principal ſource of error in the interpretation of many paſſages in our author's plays has been the ſuppoſing that his ſimiles were intended to correſpond exactly on both ſides. MALONE.

² — and two razes of ginger.] As our author in ſeveral paſſages mentions a raz of ginger, I thought proper to diſtinguiſh it from the raz mentioned here. The former ſignifies no more than a ſingle root of it; but a raz is the Indian term for a baſe of it. THEOBALD.

— and two razes of ginger.] So, in the old anonymous play of Henry V: “—he hath taken the great raz of ginger, that houſepog Beſs, &c. was to have had.” A denary raz of ginger

1 CAR. 'Odsbody! the turkies in my pannier are quite starved.³—What, offler!—A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain.—Come, and be hang'd:—Hast no faith in thee?

*Enter GADSHILL.*⁴

GAPS. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

is mentioned in Ben Jonson's masque of The Gipsies Metemorphosed. The late Mr. Warner observed to me, that a single raze or raze of ginger, were it brought home entire, as it might formerly have been, and not in small pieces, as at present, would have been sufficient to load a pack-horse. He quoted Sir Hans Sloane's introduction to his History of Jamaica, in support of his assertion; and added "that he could discover no authority for the word raze in the sense appropriated to it by Theobald."

A raze of ginger is a phrase that seems familiar among our comic writers. So, in A Looking-Glass for London and England, 1598: "I have spent eleven pence, besides three raze of ginger."—"Here's two raze more." STEVENS.

Dr. Grew speaks, in His Philosophical Transactions, of a single root of ginger weighing fourteen ounces, as uncommonly large. I doubt therefore concerning the truth of Mr. Warner's assertion. Theobald's explanation seems equally disputable. MALONE.

³ — The turkies in my pannier are quite starved.] Here is an slight anachronism. Turkeys were not brought into England till the time of King Henry VIII. MALONE

⁴ — Gadshill.] This thief receives his title from a place on the Kentish road, where many robberies have been committed. So, in Westward Ho, 1606:

" — Why, how lies she?

" Truth, as the way lies over Gads-hill, very dangerous." Again, in the anonymous play of The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth:

" And I know thee for a taking fellow

" Upon Gads-hill in Kent."

In the year 1558, a ballad entitled "The Robbery at Gads-hill," was entered on the books of the Stationers' Company.

STEVENS.

1 CAR. I think it be two o'clock.³

GADS. I pr'ythee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

1 CAR. Nay, soft, I pray ye; I know a trick worth two of that, i'faith.

GADS. I pr'ythee, lend me thine.

2 CAR. Ay, when, canst tell?—Lend me thy lantern, quoth a?—marry, I'll see thee hang'd first.

GADS. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

2 CAR. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee.—Come, neighbour Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with company, for they have great charge.

[Exeunt Carriers.]

GADS. What, ho! chamberlain!

CHAM. [Within.] At hand, quoth pick-purse.⁶

³ I think it be two o'clock.] The carriers, who suspected Gads-hill, strives to mislead him as to the hour; because the first observation made in this scene is, that it was four o'clock.

STEEVENS.

⁶ At hand, quoth pick-purse.] This is a proverbial expression often used by Green, Nashe, and other writers of the time, in whose works the cast of low conversation is preserved. Again, in the play of Apollonius and Virginia, 1575, Haphazard, the vice, says:

"At hand, quoth pickpurse, here redy am I,

"See well to the cutpurse, be ruled by me."

Again, (as Mr. Malone observes,) in The Dutchess of Suffolk, by Tho. Dine, (but hitherto ascribed to Heywood,) 1631: "At hand, quoth pickpurse—have you any work for a tyler?"

STEEVENS.

This proverbial saying probably arose from the pick-purse always seizing upon the prey nearest him: his maxim being that of Pope's man of gallantry:

"The thing at hand is of all things the best." MALONE.

GADS. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain: for thou variest no more from picking of purfes, than giving direction doth from labouring; thou lay'st the plot how.⁶

Enter Chamberlain.

CHAM. Good morrow, master Gadhill. It holds current, that I told you yesternight: There's a franklin⁷ in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company, last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter:⁸ They will away presently.

⁶ That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain: for thou variest no more &c. So, in The Life and Death of Gamaliel Ratsey, 1605: “—he dealt with the chamberlaine of the house to learne which way they rode in the morning, which the chamberlaine performed accordingly, and that with great care and diligence, for he knew he should partake of their fortunes, if they sped.”

STEEVENS.

⁷ — franklin — is a little gentleman. JOHNSON.

A franklin is a freeholder. M. MASON.

Fonteneue, says the editor of The Canterbury Tales, Vol. IV. p. 202. (de L. L. Ang. c. xxix.) describes a franklin to be inter familias—magis ditatus possessionibus. He is classed with (but after) the miles and armigeri; and is distinguished from the Libere tenentes and vassalli; though, as it should seem, the only real distinction between him and other freeholders, consisted in the largeness of his estate. Spelman, in voce Franklinus, quotes the following passage from Trivet's French Chronicle. (MSS. Bibl. R. S. n. 56.)

“Thomas de Brotherton filius Edwardi f. mariscalus Angliæ, apud la mort de son pere espousa la fille de un Franklyn apelee Alice.” The historian did not think it worth his while even to mention the name of the Frankelins. REEN.

⁸ — and call for eggs and butter: It appears from the Household Book of the Fifth Earl of Northumberland, that butter'd eggs was the usual breakfast of my lord and lady, during the season of Lent.

STEEVENS.

GADS. Sirrah, if they meet not with saint Nicholas' clerks,* I'll give thee this neck.

CHAM. No, I'll none of it: I pr'ythee, keep that for the hangman; for, I know, thou worship'st saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

GADS. What talk'st thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows: for, if I hang, old sir John hangs with me; and, thou know'st, he's no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans^a that thou dream'st not of, the which, lor

* — saint Nicholas' clerks,] St. Nicholas was the patron saint of scholars; and Nirkholas, or old Nirk, is a cant name for the devil. Hence he equivocally calls robbers, St. Nicholas' clerks.

WARBURYTON.

Highwaymen or robbers were so called, or Saint Nicholas' knights:

"A mandrake grows under some heavy tree,

"These where Saint Nirkholas' knights not long before

"Had dropt their fat arxungs to the lee."

Gloucester's Pastimes's Prologue upon Tom Coryat.

GREY.

Again, in Rowley's Match at Midnight, 1633: "I think you'd better come proring down the hills from Kingston, a rouple of St. Nicholas' clerks." Again, in A Christian turned Turk, 1612:

"— We are prevented; —

"St. Nicholas' clerks are stepp'd up before us."

Again, in The Hollander, a comedy by Claphorne, 1640: "Next it is decreed, that the receivers of our rents and customs, to wit, divers rooks, and St. Nicholas' clerks, &c.—under pain of being carried up Holborn in a cart," &c. STEEVENS.

This expression probably took its rise from the parish clerks of London, who were incorporated into a fraternity or guild, with St. Nicholas for their patron. WHALLEY.

See Vol. IV. p. 240, n. 2, where an account is given of the origin of this expression as applied to scholars. MALONE.

* — stark Trojans.—] So, in Love's Labour's Lost: "Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this." Trojan in both these instances had a rant signification, and perhaps was only a more creditable term for a thief. So again in Love's Labour's Lost: "— unless you play the dear'st Trojan, the poor wench is cast away."

STEEVENS.

sport sake, are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be look'd into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am join'd with no foot land-rakers,³ no long-staff, six-penny strikers;⁴ none of these mad, mustachio, purple-hued malt-worms:⁵ but with nobility, and tranquillity; burgomasters, and great oneyers;⁶ such

³ I am join'd with 20 foot land-rakers, &c.] That is, with no pad-ders, no wanderers no foot. No long-staff six-penny strikers, — no fellows that infell the toad with long staffs, and knock men down for six-pence. None of these mad mustachio, purple-hued malt-worms, — none of those whose faces are red with drinking ale. JOHNSON.

⁴ — six-penny strikers;] A striker had some rant signification with which at present we are not exactly acquainted. It is used in several of the old plays. I rather believe in this place, no six-penny striker signifies, not one who would trust himself to borrow, i. e. ask you for the sake of six-pence. That to borrow was the cant phrase for to steal, is well known; and that to strike likewise signified to borrow, let the following passage in Shirley's Gentleman of Verona confirm:

" Cos. You had best assault me too.

" Mal. I must borrow money,

" And that some call a striking," &c.

Again, in Claphorne's Hallander, 1640:

" The only shape to hide a striker in."

Again, in an old MS. play entitled, The Stroud Maiden's Tragedy:

" — one that robs the mind,

" Twenty times worse than any highway striker."

STEVENS.

In Greene's Art of Cony-catching, 1597, under the table of Cant Expressions used by Thieves: " — the cutting a pocket or picking a purse, is called striking." Again: " — who taking a proper youth to be his pientire, to teach him the order of striking and foisting." COLLINS.

See also The London Prodigal, 1603: " Nay, now I have had such a fortunate beginning, I'll not let a six-penny-purse escape me."

MALONE.

⁵ — malt-worms;] This rant term for a tipplet I find in The Life and Death of Jack Straw, 1593: " You shall purchase the prayers of all the alewives in town, for saving a malt-worm and a cuftomer." Again, in Gamble's Gentle's Nerdle. STEVENS.

⁶ — burgomasters, and great oneyers;] " Perhaps, tailors, trustees, or commissioners;" says Mr. Pope. But how this word as can hold in; such as will strike sooner than comes to admit of any such construction, I am at a loss to know. To Mr. Pope's second conjecture, "of cunning men that look sharp, and aim well," I have nothing to reply seriously: but choose to drop it. The reading which I have substituted, [moneyers] I owe to the friendship of the ingenious Nicholas Hardinge, Esq. A moneyer is an officer of the Mint, who makes coin, and delivers out the king's money. Moneyers are also taken for bankers, or those that make it their trade to turn and return money. Either of these acceptations will admirably square with our author's context.

THEOBALD.

Mr. Hardinge's conjecture may be supported by an ancient authority, and is probably right: "—there is a house upon Page Grece, next unto the round tuft of trees, sometime in the tenure and occupation of Simoo Bolton, Moneyer;" i. e. probably baaler. Description of Tottenham High-Croft, 1631. RAZO.

This is a very acute and judicious attempt at emendation, and is not undefeasibly adopted by Dr. Warburton. Sir Thomas Hanmer reads great cuners, not without equal or greater likelihood of truth. I know not however whether any change is necessary: Gadshill tells the Chamberlain, that he is joined with no mean wretches, but with burgomasters and great ones, or, as he terms them in merriment by a cant termination, great cuners, or great-one-durs, as we say, privates, auditors, cittulens. This is, I fancy, the whole of the matter. JOHNSON.

Perhaps Shakspeare wrote—anyers, that is, public accountants; men possessed of large sums of money belonging to the state.—It is the course of the Court of Exchequer, when the sheriff makes up his accounts for issues, amerciaments, and mesne profits, to set upon his head e. ni. which denotes emercus, est hactenus sufficientem exactionem: he thereupon becomes the king's debtor, and the parties procuratores (as they are termed in law) for whom he answers, become his debtors, and are discharged as with respect to the King.

To settle accounts in this manner, is still called in the Exchequer, to any; and from hence Shakspeare perhaps formed the word anyers. —The Chamberlain had a little before mentioned, among the travellers whom he thought worth plundering, an officer of the Exchequer, "a kind of auditor, one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what." This emendation may derive some support from what Gadshill says in the next scene: "There's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's Exchequer." The first quarto has—anyers, which the second and all the subsequent copies made anyers. The original reading gives great probability to Hanmer's conjecture. MALONE.

ſpeak, and ſpeak ſooner than drink, and drink ſooner than pray: And yet I lie; for they pray — ſark as can hold in; ſark as will ſtrik ſooner than ſpeak, and ſpeak ſooner than drink, and drink, &c.] According to the ſpecimen given us in this play, of this diſſolute gang, we have no reaſon to think they were uſe ready to drink than ſpeak. Beſides, it is plain, a natural gradation was here intended to be given of their adieus, relative to one another. But what has ſpraking, drinking, and praying to do with one another? We ſhould certainly read think in both places inſtead of drink; and then we have a very regular and humourous climax. They will ſtrik ſooner than ſpeak; and ſpeak ſooner than think; and think ſooner than pray. By which laſt words it means, that “ though perhaps they may now and then ceſſeſſ on their crimes, they will never repent of them.” The Oxford editor has diſguiſed this correction by his adoption of it.

WARBURTON;

I am in doubt about this paſſage. There is yet a part unexplained. What is the meaning of ſark as can hold in? It cannot mean ſark as can keep their own ſecret, for they will, he ſays, ſpeak ſooner than think: it cannot mean ſark as will go relucly to work without an neceſſary viſitare, ſuch as is uſed by long-ſtuff ſtrikers, for the following part will not ſuit with this meaning; and though we ſhould read by tranſpoſition ſark as will ſpeak ſooner than ſtrik, the climax will not proceed regularly. I muſt leave it as it is.

JOHNSON.

ſark as can hold in, may mean, ſark as can catch old father antic the law, or ſuch as will act blab. STEEVENS.

Tusſerville's Book as Hunting, 1575, p. 37, mentions huſſmen or hoſſebek to make young houſe “ hold in and cloſe” to the old ones: ſo Gadſhill may mean, that he is joined with ſuch companions as will hold in, or keep and ſtick cloſe to one another, and ſuch as are men of deeds, and not of words; and yet they love to talk and ſpeak their mind freely better than to drink.

TOLLET.

I think a gradation was intended, as Dr. Warburton ſuppoſes. To hold in, I believe, meant to “ keep their fellows’ counſel and their own;” not to diſcover their rogueries by talking about them. So, in Twelfth Night: “ — that you will not extort from me, what I am willing to keep in.” Gadſhill therefore, I ſuppoſe, means to ſay, that he keeps company with ſteady robbers; ſuch as will not impeach their comrades, or make any diſcovery by talking of what they have done; men that will ſilke the traveller ſooner than talk to him; that yet would ſooner ſpeak to him than drink, which might intoxicate them, and put them off their guard; and, continually to their faint, the commonwealth; or, rather, not pray to her, but prey on her; for they ride up and down on her, and make her their boots.

CHAM. What, the common-wealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

GADS. She will, she will; justice hath liquor'd her.² We steal as in a castle,³ cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed,⁴ we walk invifible.

notwithstanding, would prefer drinking, however dangerous, to prayer, which is the last thing they would think of.—The words however will admit a different interpretation. We have often in these plays, “it were as good a deed as to drink.” Perhaps therefore the meaning may be,—Men who will knock the traveller down sooner than speak to him; who yet will speak to him and bid him stand, sooner than drink; (to which they are furiously well inclined;) and lastly, who will drink sooner than pray. Here indeed the climax is not regular. But perhaps our author did not intend it should be preserved. MALONE.

¹ She will, she will; justice hath liquor'd her.] A satire on chivalry in courts of justice; which supports all men in their violations of the law, under the very cover of it. * WARBURTON.

Alluding to boots mentioned in the preceding speech. “They would melt me {says Falstaff in The Merry Wives of Windsor,} out of my fat drop by drop; and liquor fishermen's boots with me.” See also Peacham's Complete Gentleman, 1627, p. 199:

“Item, a halfpenny for liquor for his boots.” * MALONE.

² — as in a castle,] This was once a proverbial phrase. So, Dante, (in Purgatorio):

“Sirva quasi varra io alto monte.”

Again, in The Little French Lawyer, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

“That noble courage we have seen, and we “Shall fight as in a castle.”

Perhaps Shakspeare meant, we steal with as much security as the ancient inhabitants of castles, who had those strong holds to fly to for protection and defence against the laws. So, in King Henry VI. Part I. Act III. sc. i:

“Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,

“And uses it to patronage his theft.” STEEVENS.

³ — we have the receipt of fern-seed,] Fern is one of those plants which have their seed on the back of the leaf so small as to escape the sight. Those who perceived that fern was propagated CHAM. Nay, by my faith; I think, you are more beholden to the night, than to fern-seed, for your walking invisible.

GRAS. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase,³ as I am a true man.

by feminisation, and yet could never see the seed, were much at a loss for a solution of the difficulty; and as wonder always endeavours to augment itself, they ascribed to fern-seed many strange properties, some of which the rustick virgins have not yet forgotten or exploded. JOHNSON.

This circumstance relative to fern-seed is alluded to in Beaumont and Fletcher's Fair Maid of the Inn:

" — had you Gygis' ring,

" Or the herb that gives invisibility?"

Again, in Ben Jonson's New Inn:

" — I had

" No medicine, Sir, to go invisible,

" No fern-seed in my pocket."

Again, in P. Holland's Translation of Phsy, Book XXVII. ch. ix: "Of ferns be two kinds, and they beare neither floure nor seed," STEEVENS.

The ancients, who often paid more attention to received opinions than to the evidence of their senses, believed that ferns bore seed. Our ancestors imagined that this plant produced seed which was invisible. Hence, from an extraordinary mode of reasoning, founded on the fantastic doctrine of signatures, they concluded that they who possessed the secret of wearing this seed about them would become invisible. This superstition the good sense of the poet taught him to ridicule. It was also supposed to seed in the course of a single night, and it called in Browne's Britannia's Pastorals, 1613:

" The wood'rous one-night-seeding ferne."

Aburd as these notions are, they were not wholly exploded in the time of Addison. He laughs at "a Doctor who was arrived at the knowledge of the green and red dragon, and had discovered the female fern-seed." Tatler, No. 240. HOLT WHITE.

³ — purchase,] Is the term used in law for any thing not inherited but acquired. JOHNSON.

Purchase was anciently the cant term for stolen goods. So, in Henry V. Act III:

" They will steal any thing, and call it purchase."

So, Chaucer:

" And robbery is holde purchase," STEEVENS.

CHAM. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

GADS. Go to; Homo is a common name to all men.⁴ Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave. [Exeunt.

S C E N E II.

The Road by Gadshill.

Enter Prince HENRY, and POINS; BARDOLPH and PETO, at some distance.

POINS. Come, shelter, shelter; I have remov'd Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gumm'd velvet.⁵

P. HEN. Stand close.

Enter FALSTAFF.

FAL. Poins! Poins, and be hang'd! Poins!

P. HEN. Peace, ye fat-kidney'd rascal; What a brawling dost thou keep?

FAL. Where's Poins, Hal?

⁴ — Homo is a common name &c.] Gadshill had promised as he was a true man; the Chamberlain wills him to promise rather as a false thief; to which Gadshill answers, that though he might have reason to change the word true, he might have spared men, for homo is a name common to all men, and among others to thieves.

JOHNSON.

This is a quotation from the Accidence, and I believe is not the only one from that book, which, therefore, Mr. Capell should have added to his Shaksperiana. LORT.

See Vol. VI. p. 299, n. 2. p. 323, n. 4. and Vol. IX. p. 239, n. 4. MALONE.

⁵ — like a gumm'd velvet.] This allusion we often meet with in the old comedies. So, in The Malcontent, 1604: "I'll come among you, like gum into taffata, to fest, fest." STEEVENS.

P. HEN. He is walk'd up to the top of the hill ;
I'll go seek him. [Pretends to seek POINS.

FAL. I am accus'd to rob in that thief's company : the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squire⁶ further afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two and twenty years, and yet I am bewitch'd with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him,⁷ I'll be hang'd ; it could not be else ; I have drunk medicines.—Poins !—Hal !—a plague upon you both !—Bardolph !—Peto !—I'll starve, ere I'll rob a foot further.⁸ An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to ⁶ — four foot by the squire — } The thought is humorous, and alludes to his bulk : insinuating, that his legs being four foot afoot, when he advanc'd four foot, this put together made four feet square. WARBURTON.

I am in doubt whether there is so much humour here as is supposed : Four foot by the squire is probably no more than four feet by a rule. JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson is certainly right. Bishop Corbet says in one of his poems :

" Some twelve foot by the square." FARMER.

All the old copies read by the squire, which points out the etymology—esquire, Fr. The same phrase occurs in The Winter's Tale : " — not the worst of the three, but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squire." STEEVENS.

See Vol. VII. p. 344, n. 9. MALONE.

⁷ — medicines to make me love him, } Alluding to the vulgar notion of love-powder. JOHNSON.

So, in Othello :

" ————— she is corrupted

⁸ By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks."

STEEVENS.

⁸ — rob a foot further. } This is only a slight error, which turn true man, and to leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chew'd with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground, is threescore and ten miles aloot with me; and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough: A plague upon't, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They whistle.] Whew! — A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hang'd.

P. HEN. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

FAL. Have you any levers to list me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so far aloot again, for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye, to colt * me thus?

P. HEN. Thou liest, thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

FAL. I pr'ythee, good prince Hal, help me to my horse; good king's son.

P. HEN. Out, you rogue! shall I be your ostler?

FAL. Go, hang thyself in thy own heir-apparent yet has run through all the copies. We should read — rob a foot. So we now say — rob on. JOHNSON.

Why may it not mean — I will not go a foot further to rob?

STEEVENS.

* — to colt —] Is to fool, to trick; but the prince taking it in another sense, opposes it by uncolt, that is, unknave.

JOHNSON.

In the list of these senses it is used by Nashe, in Hunt with you to Saffron Walden, &c. 1596: "His master fletting and chaffing to be thus colted of both of them," &c. Again, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Loyal Subject: "What, are we bobt'd thus still? colted and carted?" From Decker's Bell-man's Night-Walks, &c. 1616; it appears that the technical term for any inn-keeper or backney-man who had been cheated of horses, was a colt. STEEVENS.

VOL. XII.

R

garters ! * If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison :³ When a jest is so forward, and afoot too,—I hate it.

Enter GADSHILL.

GADS. Stand.

FAL. So I do, against my will.

POINS. O, 'tis our setter: I know his voice.

Enter BARDOLPH.

BARD. What news?⁴

GADS. Case ye, case ye; on with your visors; there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

FAL. You lie, you rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

* — his apparent garters :] " He may hang himself in his own garter " is a proverb in Ray's Collection. STEEVENS.

² An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison :] So, in The Rape of Lucrece :

" Shall have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,

" And sung by children in succeeding times."

Again, in Antony and Cleopatra :

" — saucy flōrs

" Will catch at us like strumpets, and scold rhimers

" Ballad us out of tune." MALONE.

⁴ Bard. What news ?] In all the copies that I have seen, Poins is made to speak upon the entrance of Gadshill thus :

O, 'tis our setter; I know his voice. — Bardolph, what news? This is absurd; he knows Gadshill to be the setter, and asks Bardolph what news. To countenance this impropriety, the latter editions have made Gadshill and Bardolph enter together, but the old copies bring in Gadshill alone, and we find that Falstaff, who knew their stations, calls to Bardolph among others for his horse, but not to Gadshill, who was posted at a distance. We should therefore read :

Poins. O, 'tis our setter, &c.

Bard. What news?

Gads. Case ye, &c. JOHNSON.

GADS. There's enough to make us all.

FAL. To be hang'd.

P. HEN. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins, and I will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

PETO. How many be there of them?

GADS. Some eight, or ten.

FAL. Zounds! will they not rob us?

P. HEN. What, a coward, sir John Paunch?

FAL. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.

P. HEN. Well, we leave that to the proof.

POINS. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge; when thou need'st him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

FAL. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hang'd.

P. HEN. Ned, where are our disguises?

POINS. Here, hard by; stand close.

[Exit P. HENRY and POINS.]

FAL. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole,^s say I; every man to his business.

^s — dole,] The portion of alms distributed at Lambeth palace gate is at this day called the dole. In Jonson's Alchemist, Subtle charges Face with perverting his master's charitable intentions, by selling the dole beer to aqua-vita men. SIR J. HAWKINS.

So, in The Ceshire Wale, 1633:

" — we came thinking

" We should have some dole at the bishop's funeral."

Again:

" Go to the back gate, and you shall have dole."

STEVENS.

see Vol. V. p. 135, n. 4. MALONE.

Enter Travellers.

1 TRAV. Come, neighbour; the boy shall lead our horses down the hill: we'll walk a-foot a while, and ease our legs.

THIEVES. Stand.

TRAV. Jesu bless us!

FAL. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats: Ah! whorson caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth: down with them; fleece them.

1 TRAV. O, we are undone, both we and ours, for ever.

FAL. Hang ye, gorbellied ⁶ knaves; Are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs; ⁷ I would, your store were ⁶ — gorbellied —] i. e. fat and corpulent. See the Glossary to Kennet's Pastorals Antiquarii.

This word is likewise used by Sir Thomas North in his Translation of Plutarch.

Nashe, in his Have with you to Saffron-Walden, 1596, says: — "O 'tis an unconscionable gorbellied volume, bigger bulk'd than a Dutch boy, and far more boisterous and cumbersome than a payre of Swisser's omnipotent galeaze breeches." Again, in The Watling's goes to the Wall, 1600: "What are these thick-skinn'd, heavy-puss'd, gorbellied churles wad?" STEEVENS.

⁷ — ye fat chuffs;] This term of contempt is always applied to rich and avaricious people. So, in The Muff's Looking Glass, 1638:

" — the chuff's crows,

" Impellon'd in his surly chest," &c.

The derivation of the word is said to be uncertain. Perhaps it is a corruption of chough, a thievish bird that collects his prey on the sea-shore. So, in Chaucer's Assemblé of Foules:

" The thief the chough, and eke the chattering pie."

Sir W. D'Avenant, in his Jess Italian, 1630, has the same term:

" They're rich choughs, they've store

" Of villages and plough'd earth."

here! On, bacons, on! What, ye knaves? young men must live: You are grand-jurors are ye? We'll jure ye, i'faith.

[Exeunt FALSTAFF, &c. driving the Travellers out.]

Re-enter Prince HENRY and POINS.

P. HEN. The thieves have bound the true men:⁸ Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week,⁹ laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

POINS. Stand close, I hear them coming.

And Sir Epicure Mammon, in The Alchemist, being asked who had robb'd him, answers, "a kind of laugh, Sir."

STEEVENS.

The name of the Cornish bird is pronounced by the natives clow. Cluff is the same word with cluff, both signifying a clown, and being in all probability derived from a Saxon word of the latter sound. RITSON.

"—— this true men] In the old plays a true man is always set in opposition to a thief. So, in the ancient Morality called Hyek's Scourge, bl. l. no date:

"And when me list to hang a true man ——

"Thieves I can help out of prison."

Again, in The Four Prentices of London, 1615:

"Now, true man, try if thou can'st rob a thief."

Again:

"Sweet wench, embrace a true man, scorn a thief."

See Vol. VI. p. 251, n. 5. STEEVENS.

"—— argument for a week,] Argument is subject matter for conversation or a drama. So, in the Second Part of this play:

"For all my part has been but as a scene

"Adding that argument."

Mr. M. Mason adopts the former of these meanings, and adds, in support of his opinion, a passage from Much ado about Nothing, where Don Pedro says to Benedick, [Vol. VI. p. 253.]

"—— if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument." STEEVENS.

Re-enter Thieves:

FAL. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring: there's no more valour in that Poins, than in a wild duck.

P. HEN. Your money. [Rushing out upon them.

POINS. Villains!

[As they are sharing, the Prince and POINS set upon them. FALSTAFF, after a blow or two, and the rest, run away, leaving their booty behind them.]

P. HEN. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse:

The thieves are scatter'd, and possess'd with fear
So strongly, that they dare not meet each other;
Each takes his fellow for an officer.²

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death,
And lards the lean earth³ as he walks along:
Wer't not for laughing, I should pity him.

POINS. How the rogue roar'd! [Exeunt.

² Each takes his fellow for an officer.] The same thought, a little varied, occurs again in K. Henry VI. Part III:

"The thief doth fear each bush an officer." STEVENS.

³ And lards the lean earth —] So, in King Henry V:

"In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie

"Larding the plain." STEVENS.

SCENE III.

Warkworth. A Room in the Castle.

Enter HOTSPUR, reading a letter. *

— But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house. — He could be contented, — Why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house: — he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake, is dangerous; — Why, that's certain; 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink: but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettles, danger, we pluck this flower, safety, The purpose you undertake, is dangerous; the friends you have named, uncertain; the time itself unforted; and your whole plot too light, for the counterpoise of so great an opposition. — Say you so. say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this? By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this? Why, my lord of York³ commends the plot, and the general course of the action.

* Enter Hotspur, reading a letter.] This letter was from George Dunbar, Earl of March, in Scotland.

Mr. EDWARDS'S MS. Notes.

³ — my lord of York —] Richard Scroop, Archbishop of York.
STEVENS.

'Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan.⁴ Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month? and are they not, some of them, fet forward already? What a pagan rascal is this? an infidel? Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself, and go to buffers, for moving such a dish of skimm'd milk with so honourable an action! Hang him! let him tell the king: We are prepared: I will fet forward to - night.

⁴ — I could brain him with his lady's fan.] Mr. Edwards observes in his Criticism, "that the ladies in our author's time wore fans made of feathers." See Ben Jonson's Every man out of his Humour, Act II. sc. ii:

"This feather grew in her sweet fan sometimes, tho' now it be my poor fortune to wear it."

So again, in Cynthia's Revels, Act III. sc. iv:

"—— for a garter,

"On the least feather in her boucteous fan."

Again, as Mr. Whalley observes to me, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Will at several Weapons, Act V:

"——— We'll not better

"Your head were broke with the handle of a fan?"

See the wooden cut in a note on a passage in The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act II. sc. ii, and the figure of Marguerite de France, Duchesse de Savoie, in the fifth vol. of Moutaueon's Monsieur de France, Plate XI. STREVSAS.

This passage ought to be a memento to all commentators, not to be too positive about the customs of former ages. Mr. Edwards has laughed womerisfully at Dr. Warburton for supposing that Hoispur meant to brain the Earl of March with the handle of his lady's fan, instead of the feathers of it. The lines quoted by Mr. Whalley shew that the supposition was not so wild a one as Mr. Edwards supposed. MALONE.

Enter Lady PERCY.

How now, Kate? ⁵ I must leave you within these two hours.

LADY. O my good lord, why are you thus alone?
For what offence have I, this fortnight, been
A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed?
Tell me, sweet lord, what is't that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? ⁶
Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth;
And start so often when thou sit'st alone?
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks;

⁵ How now, Kate?] Shakespeare either mislook the name of Hotspur's wife, [which was not Katharine, but Elizabeth,] or else delightedly changed it, out of the remarkable fondness he seems to have had for the familiar appellation of Kate, which he is never weary of repeating, when he has once introduced it; as in this scene, the scene of Katharine and Petruchio, and the courtship between King Henry V. and the French Princess. The wife of Hotspur was the Lady Elizabeth Mortimer, sister to Roger Earl of March, and aunt to Edmund Earl of March, who is introduced in this play by the name of Lord Mortimer. STEEVENS.

The sister of Roger Earl of March, according to Hall, was called Estmonde: "This Edmonde was sonne to Eile Roger,—which Edmonde at King Richard's going into Ireland was proclaimed before apparent to the realme; whole aunt, called Elmor, this lord Henry Percy had married." CHROO, fol. 20. So also Holinshed. But both these historians were mistaken, for her christian name undoubtedly was Elizabeth. MALONE.

⁶ — golden sleep?] So, in Hall's Chronicle, Richard III: "— he needed now no more once for that cause eyther to wake, or breake his golden sleep." HENDERSON.

The various epithets, borrowed from the qualities of metals, which have been bestowed on sleep, may serve to show how vaguely words are applied in poetry. In the line before us, sleep is called golden, and in K. Richard III. we have "leaden slumber." But in Virgil it is "fervus somnus;" while Homer terms sleep black, or more strictly copper, χαλκός υπνός. HOLT WHITE.

And given my treasures,⁷ and my rights of thee,
 To thick-ey'd musing, and curs'd melancholy?
 In thy faint slumbers, I by thee have watch'd,
 And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars:
 Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed;
 Cry, Courage!—to the field! And thou hast talk'd
 Of sallies, and retires;⁸ of trenches, tents,
 Of palisadoes, frontiers,⁹ parapets;
 Of basilisks,¹⁰ of cannon, culverin;

⁷ And given my treasures,] So, in Othello;

"To pour one treasure into foreign laps." MALONE.

⁸ — and retires;] Retiree see ecclesie. So, in Drayton's Polyolbion, song 10: "—their secret safe retire." Again, in Holinshed, p. 960: "—the Frenchmen's flight, (for manie so termed their sudden retire,)" &c. STEVENS.

⁹ — frontiers,] For frontiere, See Thomas Hanmer, and after him Dr. Wadsworth, read very plausibly—fortice. JOHNSON.

Plausible as this is, it is apparently erroneous, and therefore unnecessary. Frontiere formerly meant not only the bounds of dissecent territories, but also the forte built along, ne near those limits.
 In Ives's Pratice of Fortification, printed in 1589, p. c, it is said:
 "A forte not placed where it were needful, might skantly be accounted for frontier." Again, p. 211: "In the seantire made by the late emperne Charles the Fifth, diuers of these walles having given way," &c. P. 341 "It shall not be necessary to make the bulwacker in townes so great as those in enyall frontiere. P. 401
 "When as any open towne or other inhabited place is to be located, whether the same be to be made a royal frontier, ne to be merely defended," &c. This account of the word will, I hope, be thought sufficient. STEVENS.

So, in Notes from Blackfriars, by H. Fitzgeoffrey, 1617:

"He'll tell of basilisks, trenches, and retires,

"Of palisadoes, parapets, frontiers," MALONE.

¹⁰ Of basilisks,] A basilisk is a cannon of a particulare kind. So, in Ham. Allie, 1611:

"My cannons, demi-cannons, basilisks," &c.

Again, in The Devil's Charter, 1607.

"—see those two basilisks

"Already mowed on their carriages?"

Again, in Holinshed, p. 816: "—setting his basiliske and other cannon in the mouth of the baile." See likewise Holinshed's Description of England, p. 193, 199. STEVENS.

Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain,
 And all the 'currents' of a heady fight.
 Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
 And thus hath so bestir'd thee in thy sleep,
 That beads of sweat⁴ have flood upon thy brow,
 Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream:
 And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,
 Such as we see when men restrain their breath
 On some great sudden haste.⁵ O, what portents are these?

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
 And I must know it, else he loses me not.

HOT. What, ho! is Gilliams with the packet gone?

Enter Servant.

SERV. He is, my lord, an hour ago.⁶

HOT. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriff?

SERV. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

HOT. What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?

³ And all the 'currents'— i. e. the occurrences. In old language occurrent was used instead of recurrence. MALONE.

⁴ That beads of sweat— So, in Julius Cæsar:

" ——— mine eyes,

" Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,

" Began to water." MALONE.

⁵ On some great sudden haste. The epithet—sudden, which overloads the verse, may be justly suspected as an interpolation.

STEVENS.

⁶ He is, my lord, an hour ago. I suppose, our author wrote:

He is, my lord, above an hour ago.

The verse is otherwise defective: as is the Servant's next reply, which originally might have run thus:

" One horse, my lord, he brought but even now."

STEVENS.

SERV. It is, my lord.

HOT. That roan shall be my throne.
Well, I will back him straight: O *esperance!*² —
Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.

[Exit Servant.

LADY. But hear you, my lord.

HOT. What say'st, my lady?³

LADY. What is it carries you away?

HOT. My horse,³

My love, my horse.

LADY. Out, you mad-headed ape!
A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen,
As you are tofs'd with. In faith,
I'll know your business, Harry, that I will.
I fear, my brother Mortimer doth stir
About his title; and hath sent for you,
To line his enterprize:⁴ But if you go——

HOT. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

LADY. Come, come, you paraquito, answer me
Directly to this question that I ask.
In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry,⁵
An if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

² — esperance!] This was the motto of the Percy family,
MALONE.

³ What say'st, my lady?] Old copies—What say'st thou, my lady? STEEVENS.

³ My horse,] Old copies—Why, my horse. STEEVENS.

⁴ To line his enterprize:] So, in Macbeth:

"— did line the rebel

"With hidden help and vantage." STEEVENS.

⁵ — I'll break thy little finger, Harry,] This token of amorous dalliance appeareth to be of a very ancient date; being mentioned in Fenton's Tragical Discourses, 1579: "Whereupon, I think, no sort of kysses or sollyes in love were forgotten, no kynd of crampe, nor pinching by the little finger." AMER.

HOT. Away,
 Away, you trifle!—Love?—I love thee not,⁶
 I care not for thee, Kate: this is no world,
 To play with mammet,⁷ and to tilt with lips:

See Saturn and Choparda &c.

"The stroke of death is as a lover's pluck,

"Which hurts, and is disguised." MALONE.

⁶ Hot. Away,

Away, you trifle!—Love?—I love thee not,] This, I think,
 would be better thus:

Hot. Away, you trifle?

Lady. Love?

Hot. I love thee not.

This is no world, &c. JOHNSON.

The alteration proposed by Dr. Johnson seems unnecessary. The passage, as now regulated, appears to me perfectly clear.—The first love is not a substantive, but a verb:

—love [thee?]—I love thee not.

Hotspur's mind being intent on other things, his answers are irregular. He has been musing, and now replies to what lady Percy had said some time before:

"Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,

"And I must know it,—He is loving me not."

In a subsequent scene this distinguishing trait of his character is particularly meted out by the Prince of Wales, in his description of a conversation between Hotspur and lady Percy: "O my sweet Harry, [says she] how many knights hilt'd to-day? Give my dear horse a drink, [says he, and answers,]—some fourteen,—AN HOUR AFTER, MALONE."

⁷ — mammet,] Puppets. JOHNSON.

So Stubbs, speaking of ladies dress in the fashion, says: "they are not natural, but artificial women, not women of flesh and blood, but rather puppets or mammet, consisting of ragges and clowts compact together."

So, in the old comedy of Every Woman in her Humour, 1609:
 "—I have seen the city of new Nineveh, and Julius Cæsar, called by mammet." Again, in the ancient romance of Virginia, bl. 1. no date: "—he made in that compase all the goddes that we call maumet and ydolles." Mammet is perhaps a corruption of Mahomet. Throughout the English translation of Mancus Pælo, 1579, Mahometam and other worshippers of idols are always called *Mahomet*s and Mahomet. Holiothed's History of England, p. 106, speaks "of maumet and idols." This last conjecture and

We must have bloody noses, and crack'd crowns,*
And pass them current too.—Gods me, my horse!—
What say'st thou, Kate? what would'st thou have with me?

LADY. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed?

Well, do not then; for, since you love me not,
I will not love myself. Do you not love me?
Nay, tell me, if you speak in jest, or no.

HOT. Come, wilt thou see me ride?
And when I am o' horse-back, I will swear
I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate;
I must not have you henceforth question me
Whither I go, nor reason whereabout:
Whither I must, I must; and, to conclude,
This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate.
I know you wise; but yet no further wise,
Than Harry Percy's wife: constant you are;
But yet a woman: and for secrecy,
No lady closer; for I well believe,
Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know;†
And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate?

quotation is from Mr. Tollet. I may add, that Hamlet seems to have the same idea when he tells Ophelia, that "he could interpret between her and her love, if he saw the puppets dallying."

STEVENS.

* — crack'd crowns, &c.] Signifies at once crack'd money, and a broken head. Current will apply to both; as it refers to money, its sense is well known; as it is applied to a broken head, it insinuates that a soldier's wounds entitle him to universal reception.

JOHNSON.

The same quibble occurs in Sir John Oldcastle, 1600:—

"— I'll none of your crack'd French crowns—"

† King. No crack'd French crowns! I hope to see more crack'd
French crowns ere long.

† Priest. Thou mean'st of Frenchmen's crowns, &c.

STEVENS.

† Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know] This line is bot-

SHAKSPEARE

Second Part of

The Taming of the Shrew

ACT II SCENE IV

11.1 Quick and then ye find it has led to death

One whom you love only to the other's heart's joy.

when will these two be fighting, 'till you & I have brought to begin to patch up these old bodies for heaven

With a few good words, 'till you & I have

LADY. How! so far?

HOT. Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate:
Whither I go, thither shall you go too;
To-day will I set forth, to-morrow you.—
Will this content you, Kate?

LADY. It must, of force.
[Exit.

SCENE IV.

Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.^a

Enter Prince HENRY and POINS.

P. HEN. Ned, pr'ythee, come out of that fat room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

sowed from a proverbial sentence: "A woman conceals what she knows not." See Ray's Proverbs. STEEVENS.

So, in Nalhe's Anatomy of Absurdity, 1589: "In the same place he [Valerius] saith, quis multis garrulitati aliquid committit, que illud salam patet tacere quod asistit? who will commit any thing to a woman's talking trust, who conceales nothing but that she knows not?" MALONE.

^a Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern. } To the old anonymous play of King Henry V. Eastcheap is the place where Henry and his companions meet: "Henry 5. You know the old tavern in Eastcheap; there is good wine." Shakespeare has hung up a sign for them that he saw daily, for the Boar's Head tavern was very near Black-friers play-house. See Stowe's Survey, 410. 1618, p. 686. MALONE.

This sign is mentioned in a letter from Henry Wyndesore, 1459, 38 Henry VI. See Letters of the Paston Family, Vol. 1, p. 175. The writer of this letter was one of Sir John Fastolf's household.

Sir John Fastolf, (as I learn from Mr. T. Wartoe,) was in his life-time a considerable benefactor to Magdalen college, Oxford, for which his name is commemorated in an anniversary speech; and though the college cannot give the particulars at large, the Boar's Head in Southwark, (which still retains that name, though divided into tenements, yielding 150l. per ann.) and Caldecot manor in Suffolk, were part of the lands &c. he bestowed. STEEVENS.

POINS. Where hast been, Hal?

P. HEN. With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or four score hogheads. I have founded the very base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers;³ and can call them all by their Christian names, as — Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that, though I be but prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy; and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff; but a Corinthian,⁴ a lad of mettle, a good boy,—by the Lord, so they call me; and when I am king of England, I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call—drinking deep, dying scarlet: and when you breathe in your watering,⁵ they cry—hem! and bid you play it off.—To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink

³ — I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers;] Alluding to the fratres jurati in the age of adventure. So, says Bardolph, in King Henry V. Act II. sc. 1: "— we'll be all three sworn brothers to France." See note on this passage. STEVENS.

⁴ — Corinthian,] A wench. JOHNSON.

This cant expression is common in old plays. So Radolph, in The Jealous Lovers, 1632:

"— let him wench,

"Buy me all Corinth for him."

"Non cuius homini contigit adire Corinthum." Again, in the tragedy of Nero, 1633:

"Nor us, tho' Romans, Lais will refuse,

"To Corinth any man may go." STEVENS.

⁵ — and when you breathe &c.] A certain maxim of health attributed to the school of Salerno, may prove the best comment on this passage. I meet with a similar expression in a MS. play of Timon of Athens, which, from the hand-writing, appears to be at least as ancient as the time of Shakspeare:

"— we also do enath

"That all hold up their heads, and laugh aloud;

"Drink much at one draught; breathe not in their drink;

"That none go out to—." STEVENS.

with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned, — to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar,⁶ clapp'd even now into my hand by an under-skinker;⁷ one that never spake other English in his life, than — Eight shillings and sixpence, and — You are welcome; with this shrill addition, — Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon, or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I pr'ythee, do thou

⁶ — this pennyworth of sugar,] It appears from the following passage in Locke about you, 1600, and some others, that the drawers kept sugar folded up in papers, ready to be delivered to those who called for sack:

" — but do you hear?

" Bring sugar in white paper, not in brown. "

Shakspeare might perhaps allude to a custom mentioned by Decker in The Gull's Horn Book, 1609: " Enquire what gallants sup in the next room, and if they be any of your acquaintance, do not you [after the city fashion] send them in a pottle of wine, and your name fastened in two pottle of paper of sugar, with some flimy apologetic cram'd into the mouth of a drawer," &c. STEEVENS.

See p. 195, n. v. MALONE.

⁷ — under-skinker;] A tapster; an under-drawer. Stink is drink, and a skinker is one that serves drink at table. JOHNSON.

Schenker, Dutch, is to fill a glass or cup; and schenker is a cup-bearer, one that waits at table to fill the glasses. An under-skinker is therefore, as Dr. Johnson has explained it, an under-drawer.

STEEVENS.

Giles Fletcher, in his Russ Commonwealth, 1591, p. 13, speaking of a town built on the south side of Moskow, by Basilius the emperor, for a garrison of soldiers, says: — to whom he gave privilege to drinke mead and beer at the drye or prohibited times, when other Russes may drinke nothing but water; and for that cause called this new citie by the name of Nalos, that is, drink or poore is.

So, in Ben Jonson's Postaster, Act IV. sc. v:

" Altho' I'll ply the table with nectar, and make 'em friends.

" Her, Heaven is like to have but a lame skinker. "

REED.

stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer, to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling — Francis, that his tale to me may be nothing but — anon. Step aside, and I'll show thee a precedent.

POINS. Francis!

P. HEN. Thou art perfect.

POINS. Francis! [Exit POINS.

*Enter Francis.

FRAN. Anon, anon, sir. — Look down into the Pomegranate,[†] Ralph.

P. HEN. Come hither, Francis.

FRAN. My lord.

P. HEN. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

FRAN. Forsooth, five year, and as much as to —

POINS. [Within.] Francis.

FRAN. Anon, anon, sir.

P. HEN. Five years! by'r lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indenture, and show it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?

FRAN. O lord, sir! I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find in my heart —

POINS. [Within.] Francis!

* Enter Francis. This scene, helped by the distraction of the drawer, and grimaces of the prince, may entertain upon the stage, but affords not much delight to the reader. The author has judiciously made it short. JOHNSON.

† Look down into the Pomegranate. To have windows or loopholes looking into the rooms beneath them, was anciently a general custom; see note on K. Henry VIII. Act V. sc. ii. STREVENSON.

FRAN. Anon, anon, fir.

P. HEN. How old art thou, Francis?

FRAN. Let me see, — About Michaelmas next I shall be —

POINS. [Within.] Francis!

FRAN. Anon, fir. — Pray you, stay a little, my lord.

P. HEN. Nay, but hark you, Francis: For the sugar thou gavest me, — 'twas a pennyworth, was't not?

FRAN. O lord, fir! I would, it had been two.

P. HEN. I will give thee for it a thousand pound: ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

POINS [Within.] Francis!

FRAN. Anon, anon.

P. HEN. Anon, Francis? No, Francis: but to-morrow, Francis; or, Francis, on Thursday; or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis, —

FRAN. My lord?

P. HEN. Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin,³ chrystal-button, ⁴ nott-pated, ⁵ agat-ring, puke-flocking,⁶ ³ Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin, &c.] The pource intends to ask the drawer whether he will rob his master, whom he decootes by many contemptuous distinctions. JOHNSON.

⁴ — chrystal-button,] It appears from the following passage in Greene's Quip for an upstart Courtier, 1620, that a leather jerkin with chrystal-buttons was the habit of a pawn-broker: " — a black taffata doublet, and a spruce leather jerkin with chrystal-buttons, &c. I enquired of what occupation: Marry, fir, quoth he, a broker." STEEVENS.

⁵ — nott-pated,] It should be printed 'as to the old folios, — nott-pated. So, in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, the Yeman is thus described:

" A nott head had he with a brown visage."

A person was said to be nott-pated, when the hair was cut short and round; Ray says the word is still used in Essex, for potted or caddis-garter, ⁵ smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch, — flora. Vide Ray's Collection, p. 108. Motell's Chaucer, 8vo. p. 11. vide Jun. Erym. ad vrb. PEXCV.

So, in The Widow's Tears, by Chapman, 1622:

" — your nott-headed rowtuty gentleman."

Again, in Sepwe's Annals for the Year 1535, 27th of Henry VIII:
" He caused his own head to bee polled, and from thenceforth his beard to bee netted and no more thaven." In Barrett's Alvearie, or Quadruple Dictionary, 1580, to nottle the hair is the same as to cut it. STEVENS.

⁴ — puke-floeking.] In Barrett's Alvearie, or Quadruple Dictionary, 1580, a puke colour is explained as being a colour between russet and black, and is rendered in Latin pullus.

Again, in Drant's translation of the english satire of Horace, 1567:

" — nigra succindam vadere palla."

" yruckde in pukyshe flocke."

In a small book entitled, The Order of my Lorde Mayor, &c. for their Meetings and Wearing of their Apparel throughout the Year, printed in 1556: "the mayor, &c. are commanded to appeare on Good Fryday in their poude gownes, and without their chaynes and typetes."

Shelton, in his translation of Don Quixote, p. 2. says: "the rest and remnant of his estate was spent on a jerkin of fine puke." Edm. 1612.

In Salmon's Chymist's Shop laid open, there is a receipt to make a puke colour. The ingredients are the vegetable gall and a large proportion of water; from which it should appear that the colour was grey.

In the time of Shakspeare the most expensive silk stockings were worn; and in King Lear, by way of reproach, an attendant is called a waxsted stocking knave. So that, after all, perhaps the word puke refers to the quality of the stuff rather than to the colour.

STEVENS.

Dugdale's Warwickshire, 1730, p. 406, speaks of "a gown of black puke." The Statute 5 and 6 of Edward VI. c. vi. mentions cloth of these colours "puke, brown-blue, blacks." Hence puke seems not to be a perfect or full black, but it might be a dusky blue, or rather, a russet black, as Mr. Stevens intimates from Barrett's Alvearie. FOLLET.

If Shelton be accurate, as I think he is, in rendering rearte by puke; puke must signify russet wool that has never been dyed.

HEALEY.

FRAN. O lord, fir, who do you mean?

P. HEN. Why then, your brown bassard^e is your

I have no doubt that the epithet referred to the dark coloured Black stockings are now worn, as they probably were in Shakespeare's time, by persons of inferior condition, on a principle of economy.

MALONE.

¹ — raddis-garter.] Caddis was, I believe, a kind of coarse ferris. The garters of Shakespeare's time were worn in light, and consequently were expensive. He who would submit to wear a roarer fort, was probably rallied by this contemptuous distinction, which I meet with again in Glapthorne's Wit in a Constable, 1639.

" ———— dost hear,

" My honest raddis-garters?"

This is an address to a scavant. Again, in Warres, or the Prave in Britain: " ——— fine pieced silke shokens on their legs, tyed up smoothly with raddis-garters ———." STEEVENS.

" At this day, [about the year 1625] says the continuator of Stowe's Chronicle, men of mean rank weare gaiters and shoe-ruses of more than four pound price." In a note on Twelfth-Night, Mr. Steevens observes that very rich gaiters were anciently worn below the knee; and quotes the following lines from Warner's Albion's England, 1602, Book IX. c. xivii. which may throw a light on the following passage:

" Then wore they

" Gaiters of liffes; but now of silk, some edged deep with gold."

In a manuscript Arroun-book kept by Mr. Philip Henlowe, step-father to the wife of Alleyn the player, of which an account is given in Vol. II. in the following article: " Lent unto Thomas Hewnde, [the dramatick writer,] the 1 of September 1602, to buye him a payre of silver gaiters, ijs. viid."

Caddis was worked galloon. MALONE.

² — brown bassard —] Bassard was a kind of sweet wine. The prince finding the waiter not able, or not willing to understand his insinuation, puzzles him with unconnected prattle, and drives him away. JOHNSON.

In an old dramatick piece, entitled, Wine, Beer, Ale, and Tobacco, the second edition, 1630, Beer says to Wine:

" Wine well born? Did not every man call you bassard but t'other day?"

So again, in The Honest Whore, a comedy by Dekker, 1635:

" ——— What wine sent they for?

" No. Bassard wine; for if it had been truly begotten, it only drink: for, look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully: in Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

FRAN. What, sir?

POINS [Within.] Francis!

P. HEN. Away, you rogue; Dost thou not hear them call?

[Here they both call him; the drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.]

Enter Vintner.

VINT. What! stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? look to the guests within. [Exit Francis.]

would not have been ashamed to come so. Here's sixpence to pay for the trusting the bastard."

Again, in The Fair Maid of the West, 1631:

"I'll furnish you with bastard, white or brown," &c.

In the ancient metrical romance of The Spide of low Degree, bl. l. no date, is the following catalogue of wines:

"You shall have Rumney and Malmesye,

"Both Ypoocrasie and Vernage wyne;

"Mountrose, and wyne of Gieke,

"Both Algaide and Respice cke,

"Annoche and Bastarde,

"Pymment also and Garnarde;

"Wyne of Gieke and Muscadell,

"Both Clare-Pymment and Rochell,

"The rede yong stomack to desye,

"And pottes of Osey set you by." STEEVENS.

Maïsen Rustique, translated by Markham, 1616, p. 635, says,

"—such wines are called rungrail, or bastard wines, which (betwixt the sweet and astringent ones) have neither manifest sweetness, nor manifest astringency, but indeed participate and contain in them both qualities." TOLLAT.

Ballet, however, in his Alvaris, or Quadruple Dictionary, 1580, says, that "bastarde is muscadell, sweet wine." STEEVENS.

So also is Stow's Annals, 867, "When an algolic came with Greek and Spanish wines, viz. muscadell, malmsey, sack, and bastard," &c. MALONE.

My lord, old sir John, with half a dozen more, are at the door; Shall I let them in?

P. HEN. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vintner.] Poins!

Re-enter POINS.

POINS. Anon, anon, sir.

P. HEN. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door! Shall we be merry?

POINS. As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye; What cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue?

P. HEN. I am now of all humours, that have show'd themselves humours, since the old days of goodman Adam, to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight. [Re-enter Francis with wine.] What's o'clock, Francis?

FRAN. Anon, anon, sir.

P. HEN. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman!—His industry is — up-stairs, and down-stairs; his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind,⁷ the Hot-spur of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife, — Fie upon this quiet life! I want work. O my ⁷ — I am not yet of Percy's mind.] The drawer's answer had interrupted the prince's train of discourse. He was proceeding thus: I am now of all humours that have showed themselves humours; — I am not yet of Percy's mind; that is, I am willing to indulge myself in gaiety and frolic, and try all the varieties of human life. I am not yet of Percy's mind, — who thinks all the time lost that is not spent in bloodshed, forgets decency and civility, and has nothing but the barren talk of a brutal soldier. JOHNSON.

*sweet Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, Some fourteen, an honour after; a trifle, a trifle. I prythee, call in Falstaff; I'll play Percy, and that damnd brawn shall play dame Mortimer his wife. Rivo,*³ says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter FALSTAFF, GADSHILL, BARDOLPH, and PETO.

POTNS. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

FAL. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen! — Give me a cup of sack, boy. — Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew nether-stocks,² and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards! — Give me a cup of sack, rogue. — Is there no virtue extant? [He drinks.]

P. HEN. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the ² — Rivo,] This was perhaps the cant of the English taverns.

JOHNSON.

Their conjecture Dr. Farmer has supported by a quotation from Marston:

"If thou art sad at others' fate,

"Rivo, drink deep, give care the mate."

I find the same word used in the comedy of Blurt Master Constantine, 1602:

"— Yet to endear ourselves to thy lean acquaintance, cry rivo ho! laugh and be fat," &c.

Again, in Marston's What you will, 1607:

"— that tubs his guts, claps his paunch, and cries rivo," &c.
Again: "Rivo, here's good juice, fresh borage, boy." Again:

"Stog, srog, or stay: we'll quaff, or any thing!

"Rivo, Saint Mark!" STEVENS.

³ — nether-stocks;] Nether-stocks are stockings. See King Lear, Act II. sc. iv. STEVENS.

sweet tale of the son! * if thou didst, then behold that compound.

* Didst thou never see Titan lift a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titan! that melted at the sweet tale of his son! The usual reading has hitherto been — the sweet tale of his son. The present change will be accounted for in the course of the following annotations. STEVENS.

All that waits restoring is a parenthesis, into which [pitiful-hearted Titan!] should be put. Pitiful-hearted means only amorous, which was Titan's character: the pronoun that refers to butter. The heat of the sun is figuratively represented as a love-tale, the poet having before called him pitiful-hearted, or amorous.

WARBURTON.

The same thought, as Dr. Farmer observed to me, is found among Turbeville's Epitaphs, p. 149:

"It melts as butter doth against the sunne."

The reader, who inclines to Dr. Warburton's opinion, will please to furnish himself with some proof that pitiful-hearted was ever used to signify amorous, before he pronounces this learned criticism's commendation to be just.

In the oldest copy, the contested part of the passage appears thus:—at the sweet tale of the sonnet.

Our author might have written—pitiful-hearted Titan, who melted at the sweet tale of his son, i. e. of Phaeton, who, by a plausible story, won on the easy nature of his father so far, as to obtain from him the guidance of his own chariot for a day.

As hence a mythological corruption, as the foregoing occurs in Loeius, 1595:

"The arm-strong offspring of the disabled knight,

"Stout Hercules" &c.

Thus all the copies, ancient and modern. But I should not hesitate to read—doubled night, i. e. the night lengthened to twice its usual proportion, while Jupiter possessed himself of Alceon; a circumstance with which every school-boy is acquainted.

STEVENS.

I have followed the reading of the original copy in 1598, rejecting only the double genitive, for it reads—of the son's. Son, which is the reading of the folio, deserves no authority from its being found in that copy; for the change was made arbitrarily in the quarto 1604, and adopted of course in that of 1608 and 1613, from the latter of which the folio was printed; in consequence of which the accumulated errors of the five preceding editions were incorporated in the folio copy of this play.

FAL. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too :

Mr Theobald reads—pitiful-hearted butter, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun;—which is not so absurd as—pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun;—but yet very exceptionable; for what is the meaning of butter melting at a tale? or what idea does the tale of the sun here convey? Dr. Warburton, who, with Mr. Theobald, reads—sun, has excused some sense from the passage by plating the words—“pitiful-hearted Titan” in a parenthesis, and referring the word that to butter; but then, besides that his interpretation pitiful-hearted, which he says means amorous, is unauthorized and inadmissible, the same objection will lie to the sentence when thus regulated, that has already been made to the reading introduced by Mr. Theobald.

The Prince undoubtedly, as Mr. Theobald observes, by the words “Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter?” alludes to Falstaff’s catering in a great heat, “his fat dripping with the violence of his moun, as butter does with the heat of the sun.” Our author here, as in many other places, having flatted an idea, leaves it, and goes to another that has but a very slight connexion with the former. Thus the idea of butter melted by Titan, or the Sun, suggests to him the idea of Titan’s being melted or softened by the tale of his son, Phaeton: a tale, which undoubtedly Shakspeare had read in the third book of Golding’s Translation of Ovid, having, in his description of Winter, in Tår Midjummer A ghit’s Dream, imitated a passage that is found in the same page in which the history of Phaeton is related. I should add that the explanation now given was suggested by the foregoing note.—I would, however, wish to read—thy son. In the old copies, thir, thre, and gay are frequently confounded.

I am now [This conclusion of Mr. Malone’s note is taken from his Appendix.] persuaded that the original reading—so—, however ungrammatical, is right; for such was the phileology of our poet’s age. So again in this play:

“This absence of your father’s draws a curtain.”
not—of your father.

So, in Tår Winter’s Tale: “— the letters of Hermione’s—”
Again, in K. John:

“With them a ballad of the king’s deceas’d.”

Again, in Antony and Cleopatra:

“Nay, but this dotage of our general’s—”

Again, in Cymbeline:

“— or could this east,

“A very drudge of nature’s—”

How little attention the reading of the folio, [“— of the sun’s,”] is entitled to, may appear from hence. In the quarto copy

There is nothing but rognery to be found in villainous man : ² Yet a coward is worle than a cup of 1613 we find — " Why then 'tis like, if there comes a hot fox,"—instead of a hot juve. There, as in the instance before us, the error is implicitly copied in the folio.—In that copy also, in Timon of Athens, Act IV. sc. ult. we find — "twixt naturall funns and fire," instead of — "twixt naturall fox and fire." MALONE.

Till the deviation from established grammar, which Mr. Malone has styled "the phraseology of our poet's age," be supported by other examples than such as are drawn from the most incorrect and vitiated of all publications, I must continue to exclude the double genitive, as one of the numerous vulgarisms by which the early printers of Shakspeare have disgraced his compositions.

It must frequently happen, that while we suppose ourselves struggling with the defects and obscurities of our author, we are in reality misled by omissions, interpolations, and corruptions chargeable only on the ignorant and careless of his original transcribers and editors. STEEVENS.

² — here's fine in this fact too : There is nothing but rognery to be found in villainous man : Sir Richard Hawkins, one of Queen Elizabeth's sea-captains, in his Voyage, p. 379, says : " Since the Spanish facts have been common in our taverns, which for conservation are mingled with lime in the making, our nation complains of colicnes, of the stone, the dropsy, and infinite other distempers, not heard of before this wine came into frequent use. Besides, there is no year that it wasteth not two millions of crowns of our substance, by conveyance into foreign countreies." I think Lord Clarendon, in his Apology, tells us, " That sweet wine before the Restoration were so much to the English taste, that we engrossed the whole produce of the Canaries; and that not a pipe of it was expended in any other countie in Europe." But the bottled travellers brought home with them the gonk for French wines, which has continued ever since. WARBURTON.

Dr. Warburton does not consider that fact, in Shakspeare, is most probably thought to mean what we now tell sherry, which, when it is drank, is still drank with sugar. JOHNSON.

Rienish is drank with sugar, but never sherry.

The difference between the true fact and sherry, is distinctly marked by the following passage in Fortuna by Land and Sea, by Heywood and Rowley, 1655 :

" Rays. Some fact boy &c.

" Drawn. Good sherry fact, sir?

" Rays. I meant canary, sir: what, hast no brains?"

STEEVENS.

of sack with lime in it; a villainous coward.—Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring: There live not three good men unhang'd in England; and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say! I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing:⁴ A plague of all cowards, I say still!

Eliot, in his Orthoepeia, 1593, speaking of sack and stewish, says: "The vintners of London put in lims, and thence proceed infinite maledices, specially the gacets." FARMER.

From the following passage in Crescent's Ghost haunting Conic-catchers, 1604, it seems as though lime was mixed with the sack for the purpose of giving strength to the liquor: "—a christian exhortation to Mother Bunch would not have done amiss, that she should not mixe lime with her ale to make it mightie." REED.

Sack, the favourite beverage of Sir John Falstaff, was, according to the information of a very old gentleman, a liquor compounded of sherry, cider, and sugar. Sometimes it should seem to have been brewed with eggs, i. e. welled. And that the vintners played tricks with it, appears from Falstaff's charge to the text. It does not seem to be at present known; the sweet wine so called, being apparently of a quite different nature. RITSON.

That the sweet wine at present called sack, is different from Falstaff's favourite liquor, I am by no means convinced. On the contrary, from the fondness of the English nation for sugar at this period, I am rather inclined to Dr. Warburton's opinion on this subject. If the English drank only rough wine with sugar, there appears nothing extraordinary, or worthy of particular notice; and that their partiality for sugar was very great, will appear from the passage in Heutzner already quoted, p. 195, as well as the passage from Morison's Itinerary, which being adopted by Mr. Malone in his note, ibid. need not to be here repeated. The addition of sugar even to sack, might, perhaps, to a taste habituated to sweets, operate only in a manner to improve the flavour of the wine.

REED.

⁴ — I would I were a weaver: I could sing psalms &c.] In the first edition [the quarto 1598,] the passage is read thus: I could sing psalms or any thing. In the first folio thus: I could sing

P. HEN. How now, wool-sack? what matter you?

FAL. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath,⁵ and drive all all manner of songs. Many expressions bordering on indecency or profaneness are found in the first editions, which are afterwards corrected. The reading of the three last editions, I could sing psalms and all manner of songs, is made without authority out of different copies. JOHNSON.

The editors of the folio, 1623, to avoid the penalty of the statute, 3 Jac. I. c. xxi. changed the text here, as they did in many other places from the same motive. MALONE.

In the persecutions of the Protestants in Flanders under Philip II. those who came over into England on that occasion, brought with them the woollen manufactory. These were Calvinists, who were always distinguished for their love of psalmody.

WARBURTON.

I believe nothing more is here meant than to allude to the practice of weavers, who, having their hands more employed than their minds, amuse themselves frequently with songs at the loom. The knight, being full of vexation, wishes he could sing to divert his thoughts.

Weavers are mentioned as lovers of music in The Merchant of Venice. [Twelfth Night, Vol. V. p. 272, v. 3.] Perhaps "to sing like a weaver" might be proverbial. JOHNSON.

Dr. Warburton's observation may be confirmed by the following passage: Ben Jonson, in The Silent Woman, makes Cuthbert tell Morose, that "the parson caught his cold by sitting up late, and singing catches with cloth-women." STEEVENS.

So, in The Winter's Tale: "— but one puritan among them, and he sings psalms to hornpipes." MALONE.

The Protestants who fled from the persecution of the Duke d'Alva were mostly weavers and woollen manufacturers: they settled in Gloucestershire, Somersetshire, and other counties, and (as Dr. Warburton observes,) being Calvinists, were distinguished for their love of psalmody. For many years the inhabitants of these counties have excelled the rest of the kingdom in the skill of vocal harmony. See J. HAWKINS.

⁵ — a dagger of lath,] i. e. such a dagger as the Friar in the old morality was arm'd with. See in Twelfth Night:

thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You prince of Wales!

P. HEN. Why, you whoreson round man! what's the matter?

FAL. Are you not a coward? answer me to that;
and Poins there?

POINS. 'Zounds,^a ye fat paunch, an ye call me
coward, I'll stab thee.

FAL. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damn'd ere
I call thee coward: but I would give a thousand pound, I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who fees your back: Call you that, backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me.—Give me a cup of sack:—
I am a rogue, if I drunk to-day.

P. HEN. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunk'st last.

FAL. All's one for that. A plague of all cowards, still say I. [He drinks.

^a In a vice, like to the old Vice,

"You need to sustain;

"Who with dagger of talk,

"In his rage and his wrath," &c.

Agas, in Life will to Life, quoth the Devil to the Collier, 1587, the Vice says:

"Come no neer me you knaves for your life,

"Lest I stick you both with this word knife.

"Back, I say, back, you sturdy baggar;

"Body o'ma, they have tane away my dagger."

And in the Second Part of this play, Falstaff calls Shallow a "Vice's dagger." STEEVENS.

^b Poins. 'Zounds, &c.] Thus the first quarto and the three subsequent copies. In the quarto of 1613, Prince being prefixed to this speech by the carelessness of the printer, the error, with many others, was adopted in the folio & the quarto of 1613 being evidently the copy from which the folio was printed. MALONE.

P. HEN. What's the matter?

FAL. What's the matter? there be four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this morning.

P. HEN. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

FAL. Where is it? taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

P. HEN. What, a hundred, man?

FAL. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scap'd by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet; four, through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hack'd like a hand-law, ecce signum. I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards!—Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains, and the sons of darkness.

P. HEN. Speak, firs; How was it?

GADS. We four let upon some dozen,—

FAL. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

GADS. And bound them.

PETO. No, no, they were not bound.

* — my buckler cut through and through: It appears from the old comedy of The Two Angry Women of Abington, that this method of defence and fight was in Shakspeare's time growing out of fashion. The play was published in 1599, and one of the characters in it makes the following observation:

"I see by this dearth of good sword, that sword-and-buckler-fight begins to grow out. I am sorry for it: I shall never see good manhood again. If it be once gone, this poking fight of rapier and dagger will come up then. Then a tall man, and a good sword-and-buckler-man, will be spitted like a rat, or a coney; then a boy will be as good as a man," &c. STEEVENS.

See Vol. V. p. 72, n. 9. MALONE.

FAL. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.*

GADS. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us,——

FAL. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

P. HEN. What, fought ye with them all?

FAL. All? I know not what ye call, all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish: if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legg'd creature.

POINS. Pray God, you have not murder'd some of them.

FAL. Nay, that's past praying for: I have pepper'd two of them: two, I am sure, I have pay'd;† two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal,—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou know'st my old ward;—here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,——

* —— an Ebrew Jew.] So, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona: “—— thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.”

The natives of Palestine were called Hebrews, by way of distinction from the stranger Jews denominated Greeks.

STEVENS.

Jews in Shakspeare's time were supposed to be peculiarly hard-hearted. So, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona: “A Jew would have wept to have seen our parting.” MALONE.

† —— two, I am sure, I have pay'd;] i. e. drubbed, beaten. So, in Marlowe's translation of Ovid's Elegies, printed at Middleburgh, (without date):

“Thou cozenest boys of sleep, and dost betray them

“To pedants that with cruel lashes pay them.”

MALONE.

P. HEN. What, four? thou said'st but two, even now.

FAL. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

POINS. Ay, ay, he said four.

FAL. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

P. HEN. Seven? why, there were but four, even now.

FAL. In buckram.³

POINS. Ay, four, in buckram suits.⁴

FAL. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else.

P. HEN. Pr'ythee, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

FAL. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. HEN. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

FAL. Do so, for it is worth the listening to: These nine in buckram, that I told thee of,——

P. HEN. So, two more already.

³ In buckram.] I believe these words belong to the Prince's speech: "—there were but four even now,—in buckram." Poins concurs with the Prince: "Ay, four, in buckram suits;" and Falstaff perseveres in the number of seven. As the speeches are at present regulated, Falstaff seems to assent to the Prince's assertion, that there were but four, if the Prince will but grant they were in buckram; and then immediately afterwards asserts that the number of his assailants was seven. The regulation proposed renders the whole consistent. MALONE.

⁴ P. Hen. Seven? why, there were but four, even now.

Fal. In buckram.

Poins. Ay, four, in buckram suits.] From the Prince's speech, and Poins's answer, I apprehend that Falstaff's reply should be interrogatively; In buckram? WHALLEY.

FAL. Their points being broken,——

POINTS. Down fell their hose.⁵

FAL. Began to give me ground: But I follow'd me close, came in foot and hand; and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I pay'd.

P. HEN. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two!

FAL. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal⁶ green, came at my

⁵ Fal. Their points being broken.—

POINTS. Down fell their hose.] To understand Points's joke, the double meaning of point must be remembered, which signifies the sharp end of a weapon, and the lace of a garment. The cleanly phrase for letting down the hose, ad levandum aliam, was to unrust a point. JOHNSON.

So, in the comedy of Wily Beguiled: "I was so near taken, that I was fain to cut all my points." Again, in Sir Giles Goosecap, 1606:

"——Help me to rust my points.——"

"I had rather see your hose about your heels, than I would help you to rust a point."

The same jest indeed had already occurred in Twelfth Night. See Vol. V. p. 243, n. 9. STEEVENS.

⁶ ——Kendal——] Kendal in Westmoreland, is a place famous for making cloths, and dying them with several bright colours. To this purpose, Drayton, in the 30th Song of his Polyolbion:

"——where Kendal town doth stand,

"For making of our cloth scarce march'd in all the land." Kendal green was the livery of Robert Earl of Huntington and his followers, while they remained in a state of outlawry, and their leader assumed the title of Robin Hood. The colour is repeatedly mentioned in the old play on this subject, 1601:

"——all the woods

"Are full of outlaws, that, in Kendal green,

"Follow the out-law'd earl of Huntington."

Again:

"Then Robin will I wear thy Kendal green"

Again, in the Play of Robyn Hood verse proper to be played in Maye Games, bl. l. no date:

"Here be a sort of ragged knaves come in,

"Clothed all in Kendal greens." STEEVENS.

back, and let drive at me;—for it was so dark,
 Hal that thou could'st not see thy hand.

P. HEN. These lies are like the father that begets them; grofs as a mountain, open, palpable.
 Why, thou clay-brain'd guts; thou knotty-pated fool; thou whorson, obscene, greasy tallowkeech,⁷—

FAL. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

P. HEN. Why, how could'st thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou could'st not see thy hand? come, tell us your reason; What say'st thou to this?

POINS. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

FAL. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at Against "Kendal, a town so highly renowned for her commodious cloathing and industrious trading, as her name is become famous in that kind." Camd. in Belt. Burnaker Journal.

BOWLE.

See also Hall's Chronicle, Henry VIII. p. 6. MALONE.

⁷ — tallow-keech,] The word tallow-catch is in all editions, but having no meaning, cannot be understood. In some parts of the kingdom, a cake or mass of wax or tallow, is called a keech, which is doubtless the word intended here, unless we read tallowkeech, that is fat of tallow. JOHNSON.

The conjectural emendation keech, i. e. tuh, is very ingenious.
 But the Prince's allusion is sufficiently striking, if we alter not a letter; and only suppose that by tallow-catch, he means a receptacle for tallow. T. WARTON.

Tallow-keech is undoubtedly right, but ill explained. A keech of tallow is the fat of an ox or cow rolled up by the butcher in a round lump, in order to be carried to the chandler. It is the proper word in use now. PERCY.

A keech is what is called a tallow-leaf in Suffex, and so its form resembles the rotundity of a fat man's belly. COLLINS.

Shakspeare calls the butcher's wife goodly Keech, in the Second Part of this play. STEEVENS.

T 2

the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! if reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

P. HEN. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this sanguine coward, this bed-prestler, this horse-back-breaker, this huge hill of flesh;—

FAL. Away, you starveling, 'you eel-skin,' you dried neats-tongue, hull's pizzle, you stock-fish,—
O, for breath to utter what is like thee!—you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tuck;—

P. HEN. Well, breathe a while, and then to it again: and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

POINS. Mark, Jack,

P. HEN. We two saw you four set on four; you —you starveling, you eel-skin.] For eel-skin Sir Thomas Haumer and Dr. Warburton read eel-skin. The true reading, I believe, is elf-skin, or little-fairy; for though the Bastard in King John, compares his brother's two legs to two eel-skins stuff'd, yet an eel-skin simply bears no great resemblance to a man.

JOHNSON.

In these comparisons Shakspeare was not drawing the picture of a little fairy, but of a man remarkably tall and thin, so whose shapeless uniformity of length, an "eel-skin stuff'd" (for that circumstance is implied) certainly bears a humorous resemblance, as do the tailor's yard, the tuck, or small sword set upright, &c. The comparisons of the stock-fish and dry'd neat's tongue allude to the leanness of the prior. The reading—elf-skin, is supported likewise by the passage already quoted from King John, and by Falstaff's description of the lean Shallow in the Second Part of King Henry IV.

Shakspeare had historical authority for the leanness of the Prince of Wales. Stowe speaking of him, says, "he exceeded the mean stature of men, his neck long, body slender and lean, and his bones small," &c. SHAKESPEARE.

bound them,⁴ and were masters of their wealth.—
Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down.—
Then did we two set on you four: and, with a word, out-faced you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house:—and, Fal-staff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roar'd for mercy, and still ran and roar'd, as ever I heard bull-calf. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done; and then say, it was in fight? What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

POINS. Come, let's hear, Jack; What trick hast thou now?

FAL. By the Lord, I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters! Was it for me, to kill the heir apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou know'st, I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince.⁵ Instinct is a great matter;⁶

⁴ —you bound them.] The old copies read—and bound them.
Corrected by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

⁵ —the lion will not touch the true prince.] So, in The Mad Lover, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

"Fetch the Numidian lion I brought over;

"If she be sprung from royal blood, the lion

"Will do her reverence, else he'll tear her," &c.

STEVENS.

⁶ —Instinct is a great matter.] Diego, the Host, in Levi's Pilgrimage, by Beaumont and Fletcher, excuses a rudeness he had been guilty of to one of his guests, in almost the same words,

"—Should I have been so barbarous as to have parted brothers?

"Pistoppo. — You knew it then?

"Diego. — I knew 'twas necessary

"You should be both together. Instinct, ignominia,

"It is a great matter in an host," STEVENS.

I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself, and thee, during my life; I, for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money.—— Hostess, clap to the doors; watch to-night, pray to-morrow.—Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, All the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

P. HEN. Content;—and the argument shall be, thy running away.

FAL. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me.

Enter Hostess.

HOST. My lord the prince,——

P. HEN. How now, my lady the hostess? what say'st thou to me?

HOST. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door, would speak with you: he says, he comes from your father.

P. HEN. Give him as much as will make him a royal man,³ and send him back again to my mother.

³ ————there is a nobleman———Give him as much as will make him a royal man.] I believe here is a kind of jest intended. He that received a noble was in cant language, called a nobleman; in this sense the Prince catches the word, and bids the landlady give him as much as will make him a royal man, that is, a real or royal man, and send him away. JOHNSON.

The same play on the word—royal, occurs in The Two Angry Women of Abington, 1599:

"This is not noble spoon, but royal play.

"It must be so where royals walk so fast." STEVENS.

Give him as much as will make him a royal man.] The royal went for 10s.—the noble only for 6s. and 8d. TALKHILL.

FAL. What manner of man is he?

HOST. An old man.

FAL. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight?—Shall I give him his answer?

P. HEN. Pr'ythee, do, Jack.

FAL. 'Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit.]

P. HEN. Now, sirs; by'r-lady, you fought fair;—so did you, Peto;—so did you, Bardolph: you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince; no,—he!

BARD. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. HEN. Tell me now in earnest, How came Falstaff's sword so hack'd?

PETO. Why, he hack'd it with his dagger; and said he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

BARD. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grafs,⁴ to make them bleed; and then to beslobber our garments with it, and swear it was the blood of true men.⁵ I did that I did not this seven

This seems to allude to a jest of Queen Elizabeth. Mr. John Blower in a sermon before her majesty, first said: "My royal Queen," and a little after: "My noble Queen." Upon which says the Queen: "What am I ten groats worse than I was?" This is to be found in Hearne's Discourse of some Antiquities between Windsor and Oxford; and it confirms the remark of the very learned and ingenious Mr. Tytus. TOLLET.

⁴ — to tickle our noses with spear-grafs, &c.] So, in the old anonymous play of The Victories of Henry the Fifth: "Every day when I went into the field, I would take a stew, and thrust it into my nose, and make my nose bleed," &c. STREVEN.

⁵ — the blood of true men.] That is, of the men with whom they fought, of honest men, opposed to thieves. JOHNSON.

year before, I blush'd to hear his monstrous dev-vices.

P. HEN. O villain, thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years-ago, and wert taken with the manner,^c and ever since thou hast blush'd extempore:

^a ——— (taken with the manner.) Taken with the manner is a law phrase, and then in common use, to signify taken in the fact. But the Oxford editor alters it, for better security of the sense, to—taken in the manner,—i. e. I suppose, by the lord of it, is a blay. WARRINGTON.

The expression—taken in the manner, or with this manner, is common to many of our old dramatick writers. So, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Rule a Wife and have a Wife:

"How like a sheep-biting rogue taken in the manner,

"And ready for a halier, dost thou look now?"

Again, in Heywood's Brain Age, 1613:

"Take them not in this manner, tho' you may." STEVENSON.

Mancee, or Manceur, or Meyneur, and old law term, (from the French manceur or mance, Lat. manus factor;) signifies the thing which a thief takes away or steals: and to be taken with the manceur or manceur is to be taken with the thing stolen about him, or doing an unlawful act, flagrante delicto, or, as we say, in the fact. The expression is much used in the forest-laws. See Manwood's edition in quarto, 1665, p. 392, where it is spelt manner.

HAWKINS.

Dr. Pettengall in his Enquiry into the use and practice of Juris among the Greeks and Romans, 4to. p. 176, observes, that "in the sense of being taken in the fact, the Romans used the expression manifesto deprehensus, Cic. pro Cluentio—& pro Caelio. The word manifestus seems to be formed of manu. Hence the Saxons expressed this idea by words of the same import, hand ahand, having in the hand, or hand ahand, having on the back. The welsh laws of Hoel-dda, used in the same sense the words Hedrad un y llaw—latrocinium vel furtum in manu, the theft in his hand. The English law calls it taken with the manner, instead of the manceur, from main, the hand, in the French language in which our sainte laws were written from Westminster primer's Edward I. to Richard III. In Westminster primer, c. xv. it is called prife ore h manner. In Rot. Parliament. 5. Richard II. Tit. 96. Couzon's Abridgements, and Coke's Institutes it is corruptly called taken with the manner; and the English translation of the Bible following the vulgar jargon of the law, rendered Numbers v. 13. relating to a woman taken in the fact of adultery, by taken with the manner."—"In the Scotch

Thou hadst fire and sword⁷ on thy side, and yet thou ran'st away; What instinct hadst thou for it?

BARD. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

P. HEN. I do.

BARD. What think you they portend?

P. HEN. Hot livers, and cold purples.⁸

BARD. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. HEN. No, If rightly taken, halter.⁹

Re-enter FALSTAFF.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone.

law it is called taken with the fang. See Reg. Majest. Lib. IV. c. xxi. And in cases of murder manifest, the murderer was said to be taken with the red hand and hot blood. All which modes of expulsion to the Western Empire took their origin from the Roman manifesto deprehensus." REED.

⁷ Thou hadst fire and sword, &c.] The fire was in his face. A red face is termed a fiery face:

"While I affirm a fiery face

"It to the owner no disgrace." Legend of Capt. John.

JOHNSON.

⁸ Hot livers, and cold purples.] That is, drunkenness and poverty. To drink was, in the language of those times, to heat the liver.

JOHNSON.

So, in Antony and Cleopatra, Act I. sc. ii. as Charmian replies to the Soothsayer:

"Sooth. You shall be more believing, than belov'd.

"Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking."

STEEVENS.

⁹ Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.] The reader who would enter into the spirit of this repartee, must recollect the similarity of sound between collar and choler.

So, in King John and Matilda, 1633:

"O. Bro. Son, you're too full of choler.

"Y. Bro. Choler! collar!

"Fitz. By the mass, that's near the collar." STEEVENS.

How now, my sweet creature of bombast?² How long is't ago, Jack, since thou saw'st thine own knee?

FAL. My own knee? when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring;³ A plague of fighting and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad: here was sir John Bracy from your father; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy; and he of Wales, that gave Arnaimon the bastinado, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cros of a Welsh hook,⁴—What, a plague, call you him?—

² — bombast!] Is the stuffing of clothes. JOHNSON.

Stubbs, in his Anatomy of Abuse, 1593, observes, that in his time "the doubletters were so hard quilted, stuffed, bombasted, and sewed, as they could neither worke, nor yet well play in them." And again, in the same chapter, he adds, that they were "stuffed with foure, five or sixe ponne of bombast at least." Again, in Decker's Satiro-mastix: "You shall sweare not to bombast out a new play with the old linings of jests." Bombast is cotton. Gerard calls the cotton plant "the bombast tree." STEEVENS.

³ — I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring!] Aristophanes has the same thought:

Δὲ δακτύλῳ μὲν ὡς ὄμῳ γ' αὖ στεκνύσθεις. Plutus, v. 1037.

SIR W. RAMSAY.

An alderman's thumb-ring is mentioned by Brome in The Antipodes, 1630: "—Item, a dillish graven in his thumb-ring." Again, in The Northern Lassi, 1632: "A good man in the city Sc. wears nothing rich about him, but the gnut, or a thumb-ring." Again, in Wit is a Conquest, 1640: "—no more wit than the rest of the bench; what lies in his thumb-ring." The custom of wearing a ring on the thumb, is very ancient. In Chaucer's Squire's Tale, it is said of the rider of the biazee horse who advanced into the hall of Cambuscan, that "—upon his thumb he had of gold a ring."

STEEVENS.

⁴ — upon the cros of a Welsh hook.] A Welsh hook appears to have been some instrument of the offensive kind. It is mentioned in the play of Sir John Oldcastle:

POINS. O, Glendower.

FAL. Owen, Owen; the same;—and his son-in-law, Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o’horse-back up a hill perpendicular.

P. HEN. He that rides at high speed, and with his pistol ³ kills a sparrow flying.

“ ———that no man presume to wear any weapons, especially Welsh-hooks and forest-bills.”

Again, in Wesford Hoe, by Decker and Webster, 1607:

“ ———it will be as good as a Welsh-hook for you, to keep out the other at flaves-end.”

Again, in The Infatuate Countess, by Marston, 1613:

“ The ancient hook of great Cadwallader.”

“ The Welsh Glive,” (which I take to be the same weapon under another name,) says Captain Grose in his Treatise on ancient Armour, “is a kind of bill, sometimes reckoned among the pole-axes;” a variety perhaps of the sinus falcata, or probably resembling the Lothian axe, which was used in the late rebellion. Colonel Gaidner was attacked with such a one at the battle of Prestonpans. See the representation of an ancient watchman, with a bill on his shoulder, Vol. VI. p. 304. STEEVENS.

The Welsh hook, I believe, was pointed, like a spear, to push or thrust with; and below had a hook to seize on the enemy if he should attempt to escape by flight. I take my ideas from a passage in Butler’s Character of a Justice of the Peace, whom the witty author thus describes: “His whole authority is like a Welsh hook; for his warrant is a gutter to her, and his mitimus a thruster from her.” Remains, Vol. II. p. 192. WALLEY.

Milow in his Dict. 1617, explains a Welsh hook thus: “Armerum genus est axe in falcem modum incurvato, partem longissimam præfixa.” Coigrave calls it “a long hedging-bill, about the length of a pailon.” See also Florio’s Italian Dict. 1598:

“Falcione. A bending finest bill, or Welsh hook—

“Penna. Hedge-bill, forest bills, Welsh hooks, or weeding honks. MALONE.

¹ ———[pistol—] Shakspeare never has any care to preserve the manners of the time. Pistols were not known in the age of Henry. Pistols were, I believe, about our author’s time, eminently used by the Scots. Sir Henry Wotton somewhere makes mention of a Welsh pistol. JOHNSON.

FAL. You have hit it.

P. HEN. So did he never the sparrow.

FAL. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run.

P. HEN. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running?

FAL. O'horseback, ye cuckoo! but, afoot, he will not budge a foot.

P. HEN. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

FAL. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps⁶ more: Worcester is stolen away to night; thy father's beard is turned white with the news; ' you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackarel. ' ⁷

Beaumont and Fletcher are still more inexorable. In The Humorous Lieutenant, they have equipped one of the immediate successors of Alexander the Great, with the same weapon.

STEVENS.
⁶ — [blue-caps—] A name of ridicule given to the Scots from their blue-bonnets. JOHNSON.

There is an old ballad called Blew Cap for me, or

" A Scottish lass her resolute chusing;

" Shee'll have bonny blew cap all others refusing."

STEVENS.
⁷ — [thy father's beard is turned white with the news;] I think Montaigne mentions a person condemned to death, whose hair turned grey in one night. TOLLET.

Nashe, in his Have with you to Saffron Walden, &c. 1596, says:
" —looke and you shall find a grey haire for everie line I have writ against him; and you shall have all his beard white too, by the time he hath read over this book." The reader may find more examples of the same phenomenon in Grimeston's translation of Goulart's Memoirable Historiettes. STEVENS.

⁸ — [you may buy land, &c.] To former times the prosperity of the nation was known by the value of land, as now by the price of stocks. Before Henry the Seventh made it safe to serve the King regnant, it was the practice at every revolution, for the conqueror to confiscate the estates of those that opposed, and perhaps of those who did not assist him. Those, therefore, that foresaw the change

P. HEN. Why then, 'tis like, if there come a hot June, and this civil huffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hoh-nails, by the hundreds.

FAL. By the mass, lad, thou say'st true; it is like, we shall have good trading that way.—But tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afeard? thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

P. HEN. Not a whit, i'faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

FAL. Well thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. HEN. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.³

FAL. Shall I? content;—This chair shall be my state,⁴ this dagger my scepter, and this cushion my crown.⁵

of government, and thought their estates in danger, were desirous to sell them in haste for something that might be carried away.

JOHNSON.
³ Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life. In the old anonymous play of Henry V. the same strain of humour is discernible:

"Thou shalt be my lord chief justice, and shall sit in the chair, and I'll be the young prince and hit thee a box on the ear," &c.

STEVENS.
⁴ — This chair shall be my state. A state is a chair with a canopy over it. So, in Macbeth:

"Our hostess keeps her state."

See also Vol. V. p. 300, n. 7.

This, as well as a following passage, was perhaps designed to ridicule the mock majesty of Cambrisis, the hero of a play which appears from Decker's Gull's Hystory, 1609, to have been exhibited with some degree of theatrical pomp. Decker is ridiculing

P. HEN. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden scepter for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown, for a pitiful bald crown!⁴

FAL. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved.—Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in king Cambises'⁵ vein.

P. HEN. Well, here is my leg.⁶

FAL. And here is my speech;—Stand aside, nobility.

the impertinence of young gallants who sat or stood on the stage;
 “on the very inches where the comedy is to dance, yea and under the state of Cambises himself.” STEEVENS.

³ — this cushion my crown.] Dr. Letherland, in a MS. note, observes that the country people in Warwickshire use a cushion for a crown, at their harvest-home diversions; and in the play of King Edward IV. P. 2. 1619, is the following passage:

“Then comes a slave, one of those drunken foits,

“In with a tavern reck’ning for a supplication.

“Disguised with a cushion on his head.” STEEVENS.

⁴ Thy state &c.] This answer might, I think, have better been omitted: it contains only a repetition of Falstaff’s mock-royalty.

This is an apophthegm of the Prince to his absent father, not an answer to Falstaff. FARMER. JOHNSON.

Rather a ludicrous description of Falstaff’s mock regalia.

⁵ — king Cambyses.] The banner is here upon a play called, A lamentable tragedie, with full of pleasant mirth, containing the life of Cambyses king of Persia. By Thomas Preston [1570.] RITSON.

I question if Shakspeare had ever seen this tragedy; for there is a remarkable peculiarity of measure, which, when he professed to speak in king Cambyses’ vein, he would hardly have missed, if he had known it. JOHNSON.

There is a marginal direction in the old play of King Cambyses: “At this tale toluc, let the queen weep;” which I fancy is alluded to, though the measure is not preserved. FARMER.

⁶ — my leg.] That is, my obedience to my father. JOHNSON.

HOST. This is excellent sport, y'faith.

FAL. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain.

HOST. O the father, how he holds his countenance!

FAL. For God's fake, lords, convey my trissful queen,¹

For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.²

HOST. O rare! he doth it as like one of these harlotry players,³ as I ever see.

FAL. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickle-brain.⁴—Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied: for though the camomile,⁵ the more it

¹ — my trissful queen.] Old copies—trissful. Corrected by Mr. Rowe. The word trissful is again used in Hamlet. MALONE.

² — the flood-gates of her eyes.] This passage is probably a burlesque on the following in Piccolino's Cambyfes:

"Queen. These words to hear makes falling teares issue from christall eyes."

Perhaps, Gay Dr. Farmer, we should read—do' ope the flood-gates, &c. STEEVENS.

The allusion may be to the following passage in Soliman and Persida:

"How can mine eyes dart forth a pleasant look,

"When they are stop'd with floods of flowing tears?" RITSON.

³ — harlotry players.] This word is used in The Ploughman's Tale: "Soche harlotte men," &c. Again, in P. P. fol. 27: "I had lever hear an harlotry, or a fomer's game." Junius explains the word by "incomple pauperitox totis fardias,"

STEEVENS.

⁴ — tickle-brain.] This appears to have been the nick name of some strong liquor. So, in A new Trick to cheat the Devil, 1636:

"A cop of Niplicate brack and new,

"The drawers call it tickle-brain,"

In The Antipodist, 1640, tettle-brain is mentioned as another position. STEEVENS.

⁵ — though the camomile, &c.] This whole speech is supremely comic. The simile of camomile used to illustrate a contrary effect, is trodden on, the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If then thou be son to me, here lies the point;—Why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven³ prove a micher,⁴ and eat black-brings to my remembrance an observation of a late writer of some merit, whom the desire of being witty has betrayed into a like thought. Meaning to enforce with great vehemence the mad temerity of young soldiers, he remarks, that "through Bedlam he is to the road to Hogsden, it is out of the way to promotion."

JOHNSON.

In The More the Merrier, a collection of epigrams, 1608, in the following passage:

"The rammer shall teach thee patience,

"Which thrive best when trodden most upon."

Again, in Parasitaster, or the Fawn, a comedy by Marston, 1606:

"For indeed, sir, a repress'd fame mount like rammer, the more trod down, the more it groweth." STEEVENS.

The style immediately ridiculed, is that of Lyly, in his Euphues: "Though the cammer the more it is trodden and pressed downe, the more it spreadeth; yet the more the oftener it is handled and roused, the sooner it withereth and decayeth," &c. FARNER.

³ Shall the blessed sun of heaven—] Thus the first quarto. In the second quarto, 1599, the word sun was changed to son, which consequently is the reading of the subsequent quarto and the folio; and so I suspect the author wrote. The orthography of these two words was formerly so unsettled, that it is often from the context alone one can determine which is meant. MALONE.

⁴ —a micher,} i. e. thout; to mich is to lurk out of sight, a hedge-creeper. WARBURTON.

"The allusion is to a truant boy, who unwilling to go to school, and afraid to go home, lurks in the field, and picks wild fruit."

JOHNSON.

In A Comment on the Ten Commandments, printed at London in 1493, by Richard Pynson, I find the word thus used:

"They make Godder house a den of theyves; for commonly in such feire and market, whersoever it be holden, ther ben many theyver, michers, and cutpurse."

berties? a question not to be ask'd. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be ask'd. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile;⁵ so doth the company thou keepest: for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in woes also:—And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. HEN. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

FAL. A good portly man, i'faith, and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by'r-lady, inclining to threescore; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be lewdly given, he deceiveth me; for

Again, in The Devil's Charter, 1607:

"Pox oo him, wicker, I'll make him pay for it."

Again, in Lyly's Moths Bombie, 1594:

"How like a wicker he floods, as though he had trunsted from honesty."

Again, in the old Morality of Hynds Sonnets:

"Wanton wenchies and also wickers," STEEVENS.

A wicker, I believe, means only a lurking thief distinguished from one more daring. Lambard in his Feignarcha, 1610, p. 186, speaking of the powers which may be exercised by one justice, says, he may charge the constables to arrest such as shall be suspected to be "draw-latches, waffors, or robcusmen, that is to say, either wirking or mightie theeves, for the meaning must remaine howsoever the word be gone out of use." REED.

⁵ ——— this pitch, as antient writers do report, doth defile;] Alluding to an ancient ballad beginning:

"Who toucheth pitch must be defil'd." STEEVENS.

Or perhaps to Lyly's Euphurs:

"He that toucheth pitch shall be defiled." HOLT WHITE.

Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree⁶ may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

P. HEN. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

FAL. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-fucker,⁷ or a poulter's hare.

P. HEN. Well, here I am set.

FAL. And here I stand:—judge, my masters.

P. HEN. Now, Harry? whence come you?

FAL. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

⁶ —[If thou the tree &c.] Sir T. Hanmer reads—If then the fruit may be known by the tree, as the tree by the fruit, &c. and his emendation has been adopted in the late editions. The old reading is, I think, well supported by Mr. Heath, who observes, that "Virtue is considered as the fruit, the man as the tree; consequently the old reading must be right. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree,—that is, if I can judge of the man by the virtue I see in his looks, he must be a virtuous man." MALONE.

I am afraid here is a profane allusion to the 33d verse of the 12th chapter of St. Matthew. STEEVENS.

⁷ —[rabbit-fuckers, &c.] Is, I suppose, a sucking rabbit. The jest is in comparing himself to something thin and lisle. So a pea-fucker's hare; a hare hung up by the hind legs without a skin, is long and slender. JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson is right: for in the account of the serjeant's feast, by Dugdale, in his Orig. Juridicales, one article is a dozen of rabbit-fuckers.

Again, in Lyly's Endymion, 1591: "I prefer an 'old coney before a rabbit-fucker." Again, in The Trial of Chivalry, 1599: "—a bountiful benefactor for sending thither such rabbit-fuckers."

P. HEN. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

FAL. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false:—nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i'faith.

P. HEN. Swarest thou, ungracious boy? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man: a tun of man^a is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that holting-hutch^b of beastliness, that swoln parcel of dropfies, that huge bombard of sack,^c that stuff'd cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree ox^d with the pudding in his

^a A poaster was formerly written—a poaster, and to the old copies of this play. Thus, in Purse Purse his Supplication to the Devil, 1595: "We must have our tables furrow'd like poasters' stables." STREAVENS.

^b —a tun of man—] Dryden has transplanted this image into his Mac Flecknoe:

"A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,

"Yet sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit." STREAVENS.

^c —holting-hutch—] Is the wooden receptacle into which the meal is bolled. STREAVENS.

^d —that huge bombard of sack,] A bombard is a barrel. So, in The Tempest: "—like a foul bombard that would shed his liquor." STREAVENS.

^e —Manningtree ox—] Manningtree in Essex, and the neighbourhood of it, are famous for richness of pasture. The fairs thereabouts are chiefly tenanted by graziers. Some ox of an unusual size was, I suppose, roasted there on an occasion of public festivity, or exposed for money to publick show.

This place likewise appears to have been noted for the intemperance of its inhabitants. So, in News from Hill, brought by the Devil's Carrier, by Tho. Decker, 1606: "—you shall have a slave eat more at a meal than ten of the guard; and drink more in two days, than all Manningtree does at a Whisfun-ale.

STREAVENS.

It appears from Heywood's Apology for Actors, 1612, that Manningtree formerly enjoyed the privilege of fairs, by exhibiting a belly, that reverend vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years?¹ Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning,² but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein villainous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

FAL. I would, your grace would take me with you;³ Whom means your grace?

P. HEN. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

FAL. My lord, the man I know.

P. HEN. I know, thou dost.

certain number of stage-plays yearly. See also The choosing of Valentines, a poem by Thomas Nashe, MS. in the Library of the Inner Temple, No. 538, Vol. XLIII:

"—as for a play of strange varietie,

"Shewen by barbelrie of Manning-tree.

"Whereto the countie franklins flock-meale fowme."

Again, in Decker's Seven deadly Sinnes of London, 1607: "Cruelty has got another part to play; it is acted like the old mimes at Manning-tree." In this season of festivity, we may presume it was customary to roast an ox whole. "Huge volumes, (says Osborne in his Advice to his Son,) like the ox roasted whole at Bostonmew Fair, may proclaim plenty of labour and invention, but afford less of what is delicate, savoury, and well condensed, than smaller pieces," MALONE.

¹ —that reverend vice, that grey iniquity,—that vanity in years?] The Vice, Iniquity, and Vanity, were personages exhibited in the old moralities. MALONE.

² —cunning,] Cunning was not yet debased to a bad meaning; it signified knowing, or skilful. JOHNSON.

³ —take me with you:] That is, go no faster than I can follow you. Let me know your meaning. JOHNSON.

Lyly, in his Endymion, says: "Tush, tush, neighbours, take me with you." FARMER.

The expression is so common in the old plays, that it is unnecessary to introduce any more quotations in support of it.

STEVENS.

FAL. But to say, I know more harm of him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old, (the more the pity,) his white hairs do witness it: but that he is (saying your reverence,) a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, ⁵ God help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know, is damn'd: if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord; banish Peter, banish Bardolph, banish Poins: but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being as he is, old Jack Falstaff, ba-

⁵ If sack and sugar be a fault. Sack with sugar was a favourite liquor in Shakespeare's time. In a letter describing Queen Elizabeth's entertainment at Killingworth castle, 1575, by R. L. [Langham] bl. l. 12mo. the writer says, (p. 86,) "sift I no more sack and sugar than I do malmsey, I should not blush so much a daye as I doo." And in another place, describing a minstrel, who, being somewhat inebriate, had been offended at the company, he adds: "at last, by sum entreaty, and many fair words, with sack and sugar, we sweeten him again." P. 52.

In an old MS. book of the chamberlain's account belonging to the city of Worcester, I also find the following article, which points out the origin of our word sack, [Et. sec.] viz. "—Aoun Eliz. xxxiiij. [1592] Item, For a gallon of claret wyne, and sack, and a pound of sugar, geven to Sir John Russell, liij. s." — This Sir John Russell, I believe, was their representative in parliament, or at least had prosecuted some suit for them at the court. — In the same book is another article, which illustrates the history of the stage at that time, viz. "A. Eliz. xxxiiij. Item, Bestowed upon the queen's trumpeters and players, liij. lb."

PACCV.

This liquor is likewise mentioned in Monsieur Thomas, by Beaumont and Fletcher, 1639, and in The Wild Goose Chase of the same authors:

"— You shall find us at the tavern,

"Lamenting in sack and sugar for your losses."

Again, in Northward Ho, 1607:

"I use not to be drunk with sack and sugar," STEEVENS.

nish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company; banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. HEN. I do, I will. [A knocking heard.
[Exeunt Hostess, Francis, and BARDOLPH.

Re-enter BARDOLPH, running.

BARD. O, my lord, my lord; the sheriff, with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

FAL. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess, hastily.

HOST. O Jesu, my lord, my lord!—

FAL. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddle-sick:⁶ What's the matter?

HOST. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house; Shall I let them in?

FAL. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold, a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad,⁷ without seeming so.

⁶ — a fiddle-sick: } I suppose this phrase is proverbial. It occurs in The Humorous Lieutenant of Beaumont and Fletcher:

" ————— for certain, gentlemen,

" The fiend rides on a fiddle-sick." STEVENS.

⁷ — mad.] Old copies — made. Corrected by Mr. Rowe. I am not sure that I understand this speech. Perhaps Falstaff means to say, — We must now look to ourselves; never call that which is real danger, fictitious or imaginary. If you do, you are a madman, though you are not reckoned one. Should you admit the sheriff to enter here, you will deserve that appellation. — The first words, however, "Never call," &c. may allude, not to real and imaginary danger, but to the subsequent words only, essential and seeming madness. MALONE.

P. HEN. And thou a natural coward, without infirmity.

FAL. I deny your major: if you will deny the sheriff, so;² if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope, I shall as soon be strangled with a halter, as another.

P. HEN. Go, hide thee behind the arras; ³—the ² I deny your major: if you will deny the sheriff, so.] Falstaff clearly intends a quibble between the principal officer of a corporation, now called a mayer, to whom the sheriff is generally next in rank, and one of the parts of a logical proposition. RITSON.

To render this supposition probable, it should be proved that the mayor of a corporation was called in Shakspeare's time major. That he was not called so at an earlier period, appears from several old books, among others from The History of Edward V. annexed to Hardyng's Chronicle, 1543, where we find the old spelling was maire:—"he beeyng at the haveryng at the howse, sent for the maire and aldermen of London." Fol. 307, b.—If it shall be objected, that afterwards the pronunciation was changed to major, the following couplet in Jordan's Purms (no date, but printed about 1661,) may serve to show that it is very unlikely that should have been the case, the pronunciation being at the Restoration the same as it is now:

"——— and the major

" Shall juggle zealous Isaac from the chaire." MALONE.

Major is the Latin word, and occurs, with the requisite pronunciation, as a dissyllable, in King Henry VI. Part I. (folio edition):

" Major, farewell; thou dost but what thou may'st."

RITSON.

³ ——— hide thee behind the arras;] The bulk of Falstaff made him not the fittest to be concealed behind the hangings, but every poet sacrifices something to the scenery. If Falstaff had not been hidden, he could not have been found asleep, nor had his pockets searched. JOHNSON.

When arras was first brought into England, it was suspended on small hooks driven into the base walls of houses and calles. But this practice was soon discontinued; for after the damp of the stone or brickwork had been found to rot the tapestry, it was fixed rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face, and good conscience.

FAL. Both which I have had: but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

[Exeunt all but the Prince and POINS.]

P. HEN. Call in the sheriff.—

Enter Sheriff, and Carrier.

NOW, master sheriff; what's your will with me?

SHER. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry

Hath follow'd certain men into this house.

P. HEN. What men?

SHER. One of them is well known, my gracious lord; on frames of wood at such a distance, from the wall, as prevented the latter from being injurious to the former. In old houses therefore, long before the time of Shakespeare, there were large spaces left between the arras and the walls, sufficient to contain even one of Falstaff's bulk. Such are those which Fantome mentions in The Drummer. Again, in The Bird in a Cage, 1633:

"Does not the arras laugh at me? it shakes methinks.

"Kat. It cannot choose, there's one behind doth tickle it."

Again, in Northward Ho, 1607: "— but softly as a gentleman courts a wench behind the arras." Again, in King John, Act IV. sc. i:

"Hear me these irons hot, and look thou stand

"Within the arras."

In Much Ado about Nothing, Borachio says, "I whipp'd me behind the arras." Polonius is killed behind the arras. See likewise Holinshed, Vol. III. p. 594. See also my note on the second scene of the first Act of King Richard II. p. 18.

STEVENS.

So, in Brathwaite's Survey of Histories, 1614: "Perthus, 10 terrible Fabius, commanded his guard to place an elephant behind the arras." MALONE.

"—my gracious lord;] We have here, I believe, another

A grofs fat man.

CAR. As fat as butter.³

P. HEN. The man, I do assure you, is not here;⁴
For I myself at this time have employ'd him.
And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee,
That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time,
Send him to answer thee, or any man.
For any thing he shall be charg'd withal:
And so let me entreat you leave the house.

SHER. I will, my lord: There are two gentlemen
Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

P. HEN. It may be so: if he have robb'd these men,
He shall be answerable; and so, farewell.

SHER. Good night, my noble lord.

P. HEN. I think, it is good morrow; Is it not?

SHER. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock.

[Exeunt Sheriff and Carrier.]

P. HEN. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's. Go, call him forth.

playhouse intrusion. Strike out the word gracious, and the metre becomes perfect;

" P. Hen. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my lord.

STEEVENS.

³ As fat as butter.] I suppose our author, to complete the verse, originally wrote—

A man as fat as butter. STEEVENS.

⁴ The man, I do assure you, is not here;] Every reader must regret that Shakespeare would not give himself the trouble to furnish prince Henry with some more pardonable excuse; without obliging him to have recourse to an absolute falsehood, and that too uttered under the sanction of so strong an assurance. STEEVENS.

POINS. Falstaff!⁵—fast asleep behind the arras, and snoring like a horse.

P. HEN. Hark how hard he fetches breath: Search his pockets. [POINS searches.] What hast thou found?

POINS. Nothing but papers, my lord.

P. HEN. Let's see what they be: read them.

POINS. Item, A capon, 2s. 2d.

Item, Sauce, 4d.

Item, Sack, two gallons, 5s. 8d.⁶

⁵ Folios. Falstaff! &c.] This speech, in the old copies, is given to Peto. It has been transferred to Poins on the suggestion of Dr. Johnson. Peto is again printed elsewhere for Poins in this play, probably from a P. only being used in the MS. "What had Peto done, [Dr. Johnson observes,] to be trusted with the plot against Falstaff?" Poins has the Prince's confidence, and is a man of courage. This alteration clears the whole difficulty; they all retired but Poins, who, with the Prince, having only robbed the robbers, had no need to conceal himself from the travellers." MALONE.

⁶ — Sack, two gallons, 5s. 8d.] It appears from Peacham's Work of a Penny, that sack was not many years after Shakspeare's death, about two shillings a quart. If therefore our author had followed his usual practice of attributing to former ages the modes of his own, the charge would have been here 16s. Perhaps he set down the price at random. He has, however, as a learned friend observes to me, fallen into an anachronism, in furnishing his tavern in Eastcheap with sack in the time of King Henry IV. "The vintners sold no other sakes, muscadels, malmsies, bastards, allasses, nor any other wines but white and claret, till the 33d year of King Henry VIII 1541, and then was old Past 60 years of age. All those sweet wines were sold till that time at the apothecary's, for no other use but for medicines." Taylor's Life of Thomas Parr, 4to. Lond. 1635. "If therefore Falstaff got druck with sack 140 years before the above date, it could not have been at Mr. Quickly's."

For this information I am indebted to the Reverend Dr. Stock, the accurate and learned editor of Demosthenes.

Since this note was written, I have learnt from a passage in Florio's First Fruits, 1578, with which I was furnished by the late

Item, Anchovies, and sack after supper, 2s. 6d.
Item, Bread, a halfpenny.

P. HEN. O monstrous! but one half-penny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack!—What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage: there let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning: we must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honourable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and, I know, his death will be a march of twelve-score.⁵ The money shall Reverend M. Bowle, that sack was at that time but sixpence a quart. "Claret wine, red and white, is sold for five pence the quart, and sack for sixpence: mufradel and malmsey for eight." Twenty years afterwards sack had probably risen to eight pence or eight pence halfpenny a quart, so that our author's computation is very exact. MALONE.

⁵ ——— I know, his death will be a march of twelve-score.] i. e. It will kill him to march so far as twelve-score yards. JOHNSON.

Ben Jonson uses the same expression in his Sejanus:

"That look'd for salutations twelve-score off."

Again, in Hisward Her, 1606:

"I'll get me twelve-score off, and give aim."

Again, in an ancient MS. play, entitled, The Second Maiden's Tragedy:

"——— not one word near it;

"There was no syllable but was twelve-score off."

STEEVENS.

That is, twelve score feet; the Prince quibbles on the word foot, which signifies a measure, and the infantry of an army. I cannot conceive why Johnson supposes that he means twelve score yards; he might as well extend it to twelve score miles. M. MASON.

Dr. Johnson supposed that "twelve score" meant twelve score yards, because that was the common phraseology of the time. When archers talked of sending a shaft fourteen fars, they meant fourteen score yards. So, in The Merry Wives of Windsor: "This boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as easily as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve fars." See also King Henry IV. P. 16. I have therefore great doubts whether the equivocal pointed out by Mr. Mason was intended. If not, Mr. Pope's interpretation [twelve-score feet] is wrong, and Dr. Johnson's right. MALONE.

be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so good morrow, Poins.

POINS. Good morrow, good my lord. [Exeunt.]

ACT III. SCENE 1.

Bangor. A Room in the Archdeacon's House.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, MORTIMER, and GLENDOWER.

MORT. These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction^e full of prosperous hope.

HOT. Lord Mortimer,—and cousin Glendower,—
Will you sit down?—

And, uncle Worcester:—A plague upon it?

I have forgot the map.

GLEND. No, here it is.

Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur:

For by that name as oft as Lancaster

Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale; and, with

A rising sigh, he wisheth you in heaven.

Twelve-score always means so many yards and not feet. There is not the smallest reason to suppose that Shakspeare meant any quibble. DOUCE.

^a — induction —] That is, entrance; beginning.

JOHNSON.

An induction was anciently something introductory to a play. Such is the business of the Tinker previous to the performance of The Taming of a Shrew. Shakspeare often uses the word, which his attendance on the theatres might have familiarized to his conception. Thus, in King Richard III.

“Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous.” STEEVENS.

HOT. And you in hell, as often as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

GLEND. I cannot blame him: at my nativity,⁷
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
Of burning cressets;⁸ and, at my birth,
The frame and huge foundation of the earth
Shak'd like a coward.

HOT. Why, so it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat had
But kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born.

GLEND. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

⁷ — of my nativity, &c.] Most of these prodigies appear to have been invented by Shakspeare. Holinshed says only: "Strange wonders happened at the nativity of this man; for the same night he was born, all his father's horses in the stable were found to stand in blood up to their bellies." STEEVENS.

In the year 1402, a blazing star appeared, which the Welsh bards represented as portending good fortune to Owen Glendower. Shakspeare had probably read an account of this star in some chronicle, and transferred its appearance to the time of Owen's nativity.

MALONE.

⁸ Of burning cressets;] A cresset was a great light set upon a beacon, light-house, or watch tower: from the French word cressette, a little cross, because the beacons had anciently crosses on the top of them. HANMER.

The same word occurs in Histrionastix, or the Player whist, 1610:

"Come Cressida, my cresset-light,

"Thy face doth shine both day and night."

In the reign of Elizabeth, Holinshed says: "The countie Palatine of Rhene was conveyed by cresset-light, and torch-light, to Sir T. Gresham's house in Bishopsgate-street." Again, in The State Moral of the Three Lords of London, 1590:

"Watches in armour, triumphs, cresset-lights."

The cresset-lights were lights fixed on a moveable frame or cross, like a turnstile, and were carried on poles, in processions. I have seen them represented in an ancient print from Van Velde. See also a wooden cut in Vol. X. p. 146. STEEVENS.

HOT. And I say, the earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose, as fearing you it shook.

GLEND. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

HOT. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,

And not in fear of your nativity.
Diseased nature⁹ oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth
Is with a kind of cholick pinch'd and vex'd
By the imprisoning of unruly wind
Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving,
Shakes the old beldame earth,² and topples down

⁹ Diseased nature — } The poet has here taken, from the perseverance and continuoufness of Hotspur's temper, an opportunity of raising his character, by a very rational and philosophical consideration of superstitious error. JOHNSON.

² — oft the teeming earth

Is with a kind of cholick pinch'd and vex'd

By the imprisoning of unruly wind

Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving,

Shakes the old beldame earth. } So, in our author's Venus and

Adonis:

"As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,

"Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,

"Which with old terrours doth men's minds confound."

The same thought is found in Spenser's Fairy Queen, B. III. c. ix:

"----like as a boyish wind,

"Which in th' earth's hollow caves hath long been hid,

"And, shut up fast within her prisons blind,

"Makes the huge element agast her loud

"To move, and tremble, as it were agast,

"Until that it an issue forth may find:

"Then forth it breakes; and with his furious blast

"Confounds both land and seas, and skyes doth overcast."

So also in Drayton's Legend of Fines Guevillon, 1594:

"As when within the soft and spongie soyle

"The wind doth pierce the equails of the earth,

"Where humblyburly with a restless coyle

"Shakes all the crewe, wanting issue forth," &c.

MALONE.

Steeple, and moss-grown towers.³ At your birth
Our grandam earth, having this dislempature,
In passion shook.

GLEND. Cousin, of many men
I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave
To tell you once again,—that, at my birth,
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes;
The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds
Were strangely clamorous to the frightened fields.⁴

Beldam is not used here as a term of contempt, but in the sense of ancient mother. Bil agn, Fr. Dayton, in the 8th song of his Polyglottus, uses bil-fin in the same sense:

"As his great bil-fin Brute from Albion's heirs is won."
Again, in the 14th song:

"When he his long descent shall from his bil-fin bring."

Biau per is French for father-in-law, but the word employed by Dayton seems to have no such meaning. Perhaps beldam originally meant a grandmother. So, in Shakspeare's Tarquin and Lucretia:

"To show the beldam daughters of her daughter."

STEEVENS.

³ —and topples down

Simplex, and moss-grown towers.] To topple is to tumble. So, in Macbeth:

"Though castles topple on their wardens' heads."

STEEVENS.

⁴ The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds

Were strangely clamorous to the frightened fields.] Shakspeare appears to have been as well acquainted with the rarer phenomena, as with the ordinary appearances of nature. A writer in The Philosophical Transactions, No. 207, describing an earthquake in Catania, near Mount Etna, by which eighteen thousand persons were destroyed, mentions one of the circumstances that are here said to have marked the birth of Glendower: "There was a blow, as if all the artillery in the world had been discharged at once; the sea retired from the town above two miles; the birds flew about astonished; the cattle in the fields ran crying." MALONE.

—to the frightened fields.] We should read—is the frightened fields. M. MASON.

In the very next scene, to is used where we should at present wish in:

"He hath more worthy interest to the state—," STEEVENS.

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary;
 And all the courses of my life do show,
 I am not in the roll of common men.
 Where is he living,—clipp'd in with the sea
 That chides the banks of England, Scotland,
 Wales,——

Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me?
 And bring him out, that is hut woman's son,
 Can trace me in the tedious ways of art,
 Or hold me pace in deep experiments.

HOT. I think, there is no man speaks better
 Welsh:——

I will to dinner.

MORT. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him mad.

GLEND. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

HOT. Why, so can I; or so can any man:
 But will they come, when you do call for them?

GLEND. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command

The devil.

HOT. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil,^s

By telling truth; Tell truth, and shame the devil.—
 If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,

And I'll be sworn, I have power to shame him hence.
 O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil.

MORT. Come, come,
 No more of this unprofitable chat.

GLEND. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head

^s — to shame the devil, } “Speak the truth, and shame the devil,” was proverbial. See Roy's Proverbs, 163. R220.

Against my power: thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy-bottom'd Severn, have I sent him,
Bootless⁶ home, and weather-beaten back.

HOT. Home without boots, and in foul weather too!

How 'scapes he agues, in the devil's name?

GLEAD. Come, here's the map; Shall we divide
'our right,

According to our threefold order ta'en?

MORT. The archdeacon hath divided it?

Into three limits, very equally:

England, from Trent and Severn hitherto,⁸

By south and east, is to my part assign'd:

All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore,

And all the fertile land within that bound,

To Owen Glendower:—and, dear coz, to you

The remnant northward, lying off from Trent.

And our indentures tripartite are drawn:

Which being sealed interchangeably,

{ A business that this night may execute, }

To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I,

And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth;

To meet your father, and the Scottish power,

As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.

My father Glendower is not ready yet, -

⁶ Bootless — } Unless we read bootless as a trisyllable, the metre will be defective. (In As you like it — wasiler is apparently to be thus pronounced:

"The parts and graces of the wasiler." STEEVENS.

Mr. Pope transferred the word him from the former line to this: and perhaps he was right. MALONE.

⁷ The archdeacon hath divided it — } The metre is here deficient. I suppose the line originally ran thus:

The archdeacon hath divided it already. STEEVENS.

⁸ England, from Trent and Severn hitherto, } i. e. to this spot { pointing to the map). MALONE.

Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days, — Within that space, [To GLEND.] you may have drawn together

Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen.

GLEND. A shorter time shall send me to you,
lords,

And in my conduct shall your ladies come:
From whom you now must steal, and take no leave;
For there will be a world of water shed,
Upon the parting of your wives and you.

HOT. Methinks, my moiety, north from Burton here,¹

In quantity equals not one of yours:
See, how this river comes me cranking in,²
And cuts me, from the best of all my land,
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out,³

¹ Methinks my moiety, north from Burton here.] The division is here into three parts. — A moiety was frequently used by the writers of Shakspeare's age, as a portion of any thing, though not divided into two equal parts. See a note on King Lear, A. 2. l. 4. MALONE.

² — cranking in.] Perhaps we should read — crankling. So, Drayton in his Polyolbion, song 7, speaking of a river, says that Meander —

"Hath not so many turns, nor crankling nooks as she."
STEVENS.

Mr. Pope reads — crankling. Crankling, however, is right. So, in our author's Venus and Adonis:

"He cranks and crosses with a thousand doubles."
MALONE.

³ — cantle out.] A cantle is a corner, or piece of any thing, in the same sense that Horace uses angulus:

"O si angulus ille

"Proximus aridet!"

Cantex, Fr. canté, Ital. signify a corner. To cantle is a verb used in Decker's Whore of Babylon, 1607:

"That this vast globe terrestrial should be cantled."

I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run,
In a new channel, fair and evenly:
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.

GLEND. Not wind? it shall, it must; you see, it doth.

MORT. Yea,
But mark, how he bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side;
Gelding the oppos'd continent as much;
As on the other side it takes from you.

WOR. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here,

And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs straight and even.

HOT. I'll have it so; a little charge will do it.

GLEND. I will not have it alter'd.

HOT. Will not you?

GLEND. No, nor you shall not.

HOT. Who shall say me nay?

GLEND. Why, that will I.

HOT. Let me not understand you then.⁴
Speak it in Welsh.

GLEND. I can speak English, lord, as well as you;

The substantive occurs in Drayton's Polyolbion, song 11:

"Rude Neptune cutting in a castle forth doth take,"

Again, in a New Trick to cheat the Devil, 1636:

"Not so much as a cantell of cheefe or crust of bread."

STEEVENS.

Coste in heraldry is a corner of the shield. Cost of cheese is now used in Pembrokeshire. LOWE.

⁴ Let me not understand you then,] Yea, an apparent interpolation, destructive to the metre, should, I think, be omitted.

STEEVENS.

For I was train'd up in the English court;⁶
 Where, being but young, I framed to the harp
 Many an English ditty, lovely well,
 And gave the tongue⁷ a helpful ornament;
 A virtue that was never seen in you.

HOT. Marry, and I'm glad of't with all my heart;
 I had rather be a kitten, and cry — mew,
 Than one of these same mere ballad-mongers:
 I had rather hear a brazen canstick turn'd,⁸

⁶ For I was train'd up in the English court: The real name of Owen Glendower was Vaughan, and he was originally a barrister of the Middle Temple. STEEVENS.

Owen Glendower, whose real name was Owain ap-Iryth Vaughan, took the name of Glendower or Glendowr from the lordship of Glyndourdw, of which he was owner. He was particularly adverse to the Mortimers, because Lady Perry's nephew, Edward earl of Mortimer, was rightfully entitled to the principality of Wales, (as well as the crown of England,) being lineally descended from Gladys the daughter of Llewelyn and sister of David Prince of Wales, the latter of whom died in the year 1246. Owain Glendower himself claimed the principality of Wales.

He afterwards became esquire of the body to King Richard II. with whom he was in attendance at Flint castle, when Richard was taken prisoner by Henry of Bolingbroke, afterwards King Henry IV. Owain Glendower was crowned Prince of Wales in the year 1402, and for near twelve years was a very formidable enemy to the English. He died in great distress in 1415. MALONE.

⁷ — the tongue — The English language. JOHNSON.

Glendower means, that he graced his own tongue with the art of fencing. RITSON.

I think Dr. Johnson's explanation the true one. MALONE.

⁸ — a brazen canstick turn'd, The word canstick, which destroys the harmony of the line, is written canstick in the quarto, 1598, 1599, and 1608; and so it might have been pronounced. Heywood, and several of the old writers, constantly spell it so this manner. But with the canstick is one of the spirits mentioned by Reginald Scott, 1584. Again, in The Famous History of Tasso's Statley, 1605, bl. 1: "If he have so much as a canstick, I am a traitor." The ooise to which Hotspur alludes, is likewise mentioned in A New Trick to cheat the Devil, 1636:

Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree;
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry;
'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag.

GLEND. Come, you shall have I rent turn'd.

HOT. I do not care: I'll give thrice so much land
To any well-deserving friend;
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair,
Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?

GLEND. The moon shines fair, you may away by night:

I'll baste the writer,^s and, withal,

"As if you were to lodge in Lothbury,

"Where they turn hairs candlesticks."

And again, in Ben Jonson's masque of Witches Metamorphosed:

"From the candlesticks of Lothbury,

"And the loud pure wives of Banbury." STEEVENS.

"I'll baste the writer,] He means the writer of the articles.

POPE,

I suppose, to complete the measure, we should read:

I'll in and baste the writer;

for he goes out immediately.

So, in The Taming of a Shrew:

"But I will in, to be reveng'd for this villainy."

Again:

"My cake is dough: But I'll in, among the rest."

STEEVENS,

We should undoubtedly read —

I'll in, and baste the writer, and withal —

The two supplemental words which were suggested by Mr. Steevens, complete both the sense and metre, and were certainly omitted in the first copy by the negligence of the transcriber or printer. Such omissions more frequently happen than almost any other errors of the press. The present restoration is supported by various other passages. So, in Timon of Athens, Act I. sc. i:

"Lord, Shall we in?

"Lord, I'll keep you company."

Again, ibidem, Act V. sc. iii:

"In, and prepare."

Again, more appositely, in K. Richard III:

"I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence." MALONE.

Break with your wives of your departure hence;
I am afraid, my daughter will run mad,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer. [Exit.]

MORT. Fie, cousin Percy! how you cross my father!

HOT. I cannot choose: sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant,⁷
Of the dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies;
And of a dragon, and a finless fish,
A clip-wing'd griffin, and a moulted raven,
A couching lion, and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skumble-skamble stuff⁸.
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what, —

⁷ — of the moldwarp and the ant, } This alludes to an old prophecy, which is said to have induced Owen Glendower to take arms against King Henry. See Hall's Chronicle, fol. 50. PREF.

So, in The Mirror for Magistrates, 1559, Owen Glendower is introduced speaking of himself:

" And for to set us hereon more agog,
" A prophet came (a vengeance take them all!)
" Assuming Henry to be Gogmagog,
" Whom Merlin doth a moldwarp ever call,
" Accus'd of God, that must be brought in thral,
" By a wulf, a dragon, and a lyon strong,
" Which should divide his kingdome them among.

The moldwarp is the mole, so called because it renders the surface of the earth uneven by the hillocks which it raises.

⁸ Anglo-Saxon molde, and wespan, STEVENS.

So Holinshed, for he was Shakspeare's authority: " This [the division of the realm between Mortimer, Glendower, and Percy,] was done (as some have sayde) through a foolish credite given to a vaine prophete, as though king Henry was the moldwarp, cursed of God's owne mouth, and they three were the dragon, the lion, and the wolfe, which should divide this realm between them."

MALONE.

⁸ — skumble-skamble stuff —] This cant word, formed by reduplication from scumble, occurs likewise in Taylor the water-poet's Description of a Wanton:

" Here's a sweet deal of skimble-skamble stuff."

STEVENS.

He held me, but last night, at least nine hours,²
 In reckoning up the several devils' names,³
 That were his lackeys: I cried, humph, — and well,
 — go to,⁴ —

But mark'd him not a word. O, he's as tedious
 As is a tired horse, a railing wife;
 Worse than a smoky house: — I had rather live
 With cheese and garlick, in a windmill, far,
 Than feed on cates, and have him talk to me,
 In any summerhouse in Christendom.

MORT. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman;
 Exceedingly well read, and profited
 In strange concealments;⁵ valiant as a lion,
 And wond'rous affable; and as hountiful
 As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
 He holds your temper in a high respect,
 And curbs himself even of his natural scope,
 When you do cross his humour; 'faith, he does:
 I warrant you, that man is not alive,
 Might so have tempted him as you have done,
 Without the taste of danger and reproof,
 But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.

² He held me, but last night, at least nine hours,] I have inserted the conjunction — but, which is wanting in the ancient copies. Without some such assistance the metre would be defective.

STEEVENS.

³ In reckoning up the several devils' names,] See Reginald Scot's Discovery of Witchcraft, 1584, Book XV. ch. ii. p. 377, where the reader may find his patience as severely exercised as that of Hotspur, and on the same occasion. Shakspeare must certainly have seen this book. STEEVENS.

⁴ — go to,] These two senseless monosyllables seem to have been added by some foolish player, purposely to destroy the measure.

RITSON.

⁵ ——— profited

In strange concealments;] Skilled in wonderful secrets.

WOR. In faith, my lord, you are too wilful-blame ;⁶

And since your coming hither, have done enough
To put him quite beside his patience.

You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault:

Though sometimes it show greatness, courage,
blood,

(And that's the dearest grace it renders you,)

Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,

Defect of manners, want of government,

Pride, haughtiness, opinion,⁸ and disdain:

The least of which, haunting a nobleman,

Loseth men's hearts; and leaves behind a stain

Upon the beauty of all parts besides,

Beguiling them of commendation.

HOT. Well, I am school'd; Good manners be your speed!

Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter GLENDOWER, with the Ladies.

MORT. This is the deadly spite that angers me,—
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.

⁶ — too wilful-blame; This is a mode of speech with which I am not acquainted. Perhaps it might be read — too wilful-blunt, or too wilful-brut; or thus:

Judged, my lord, you are to blame, too wilful. JOHNSON.

I suspect that our author wrote —

— to wilful-blame:

i. e. you are wilfully to blame; the offence you give is meditated, designed.

Shakspeare has several compounds in which the first adjective has the power of an adverb. Thus, (as Mr Tyrwhitt has observed,) in King Richard III we meet with childish-faithful, sensatest-obstinate, and mortal-flaring. STEEVENS.

⁸ — opinion,] means here self-opinion, or conceit. M. MASON.

GLEND. My daughter weeps; she will not part with you,

She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars.

MORT. Good father, tell her,—that she, and my aunt Percy,

Shall follow in your conduct speedily.

GLENDOWER speaks to his daughter in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

GLEND. She's desperate here; a peevish self-will'd harlotry.⁷

One no persuasion⁸ can do good upon.

[Lady M. speaks to MORTIMER in Welsh.

MORT. I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh Which thou pourest down from these swelling heavens,⁹

I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,

In such a parley would I answer thee.

[Lady M. speaks.

I understand thy kisses, and thou mine,

And that's a feeling disputation:¹⁰

But I will never be a truant, love,

Till I have learn'd thy language; for thy tongue

Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd.

⁷ — a peevish self-will'd harlotry.] Capulet, in Romeo and Juliet, reproaches his daughter in the same terms:

"A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is." RITSON.

⁸ One no persuasion &c.] A common ellipsis for—One that no persuasion &c. and so the ancient copies redundantly read.

STEEVENS.

⁹ Which thou pourest down from these swelling heavens.] The defect of harmony in this line, induces me to suppose (with Sir T. Haume) that our author originally wrote—

Which thou pour'st down from these two swelling heavens, meaning her two prominent lips. STEEVENS.

¹⁰ — a feeling disputation.] i. e. a contest of sensibility, a reciprocation in which we engage on equal terms. STEEVENS.

Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bower,³
 With ravishing division, to her lute.⁴

GLEND. Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.⁵
 [Lady M. speaks again.]

MORT. O, I am ignorance itself in this.⁶

GLEND. She bids you
 Upon the wanton rushes lay you down,<⁷

³ Sung by a fair queen &c.] Our author perhaps here intended a compliment to Queen Elizabeth, who was a performer on the lute and the virginals. See Sir James Melvil's curious account, Memsius, folio, p. 50. MALONE.

⁴ With ravishing division, to her lute.] This verse may serve for a translation of a line in Horace:

"—gustaque formis

"Imbelli cithara caesina dividet."

It is to no purpose that you (Paris) please the women by singing "with ravishing division," to the lute. See the Commentators, and Vulsius in Catullus, p. 239. S. W.

Divisions were very uncommon in vocal music during the time of Shakespeare. BURNES.

⁵ Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.] We might read, to complete the verse:

Nay, if you melt, why then will she run mad. STEEVENS.

⁶ O, I am ignorant itself in this.] Massinger uses the same expression in The Unnatural Combat, 1639:

"—In this you speak, sir,

"I am ignorance itself." STEEVENS.

⁷ She bids you

Upon the wanton rushes lay you down.] It was the custom in this country, for many ages, to strew the floors with rushes, as we now cover them with carpets. JOHNSON.

It should have been observed in a note, that the old copies read an, not upon. This slight emendation was made by Mr. Steevens.

I am now, however, inclined to adhere to the original reading, and would print the line as it stands in the old copy:

She bids you on the wanton rushes lay you down.

We have some other lines in these plays as irregular as this.

MALONE.

We have; but there is the strongest reason for supposing such irregularities arise from the badness of the playhouse copies, or the carelessness of printers. STEEVENS.

And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
 And she will sing the song that pleasest you,
 And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep,*
 Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness;
 Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep,²
 As is the difference betwixt day and night,
 The hour before the heavenly-barnes'd team
 Begins his golden progress in the east.

MORT. With all my heart I'll sit, and hear her sing:
 By that time will our book,³ I think, be drawn.

* And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep,] The expression is fine; intimating, that the god of sleep should not only sit on his eyelids, but that he should be crown'd, that is, pleased and delighted.

WARBURTON:

The same image (whatever idea it was meant to convey) occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher's Philaster:

"—who shall take up his lute,

"And touch it till he crown a sleep

"Upon my eyelid," STEEVENS.

The image is certainly a strange one; but I do not suspect any corruption of the text. The god of sleep is not only to sit on Mortimer's eyelids, but to be crown'd, that is, with sovereign dominion. So, in Twelfth Night:

"Him will I tear out of that cruel eye,

"Where he sits crown'd in his master's spite."

Again, in our poet's 114th Sonnet:

"Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with you,

"Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery?"

Again, in Romeo and Juliet:

"Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit,

"For 'tis a throne, where honour may be crown'd

"Sole monarch of the universal earth."

Again, in King Henry V:

"As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,

"Crown'd with faith and constant loyalty." MALONE.

* Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep,] She will lull you by her song in soft tranquillity, in which you shall be so near to sleep as to be free from perturbation, and so much awake as to be sensible of pleasure; a state partaking of sleep and wakefulness, at the twilight of night and day. JOHNSON.

* —our book,] Our paper of conditions. JOHNSON.

GLEND. Do so;
And those musicians that shall play to you,
Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet straight they shall be here:³ sit, and attend.

HOT. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down:
Come, quick, quick; that I may lay my head in thy lap.

LADY P. Go, ye giddy goose.

GLENDOWER speaks some Welsh words, and then the musick plays.

HOT. Now I perceive, the devil understands
Welsh;

And 'tis no marvel, he's so humorous.
By'r-lady, he's a good musician.

LADY P. Then should you be nothing but musical;
for you are altogether govern'd by humours.
Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

HOT. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, howl in Irish.

LADY P. Would'st thou have thy head broken?

HOT. No.

³ *And those musicians that shall play to you,
Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet straight they shall be here:* The old copies—And—

STEEVENS.

Glendower had before boasted that he could call spirits from the vasty deep; he now pretends to equal power over the spirits of the air. So, says he to Mortimer, and, by my power, you shall have heavenly musick. The musicians that shall play to you, now hang in the air a thousand miles from the earth: I will summon them, and they shall straight be here. "And straight" is the reading of the most authentick copies, the quarto 1598, and the folio 1623, and indeed of all the other ancient editions. Mr. Rowe first introduced the reading—Yet straight, which all the subsequent editors have adopted; but the change does not seem absolutely necessary.

MALONE.

LADY P. Then be still.

HOT. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.⁴

LADY P. Now God help thee!

HOT. To the Welsh lady's bed.

LADY P. What's that?

HOT. Peace! she sings.

A Welsh Song sung by Lady M.

HOT. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

LADY P. Not mine, in good sooth.

HOT. Not yours, in good sooth! 'Heart, you swear like a comfit-maker's wife! Not you, in good sooth; and, As true as I live; and, As God shall mend me; and, As sure as day:

And giv'st such farcenet surety for thy oaths,
As if thou never walk'dst further than Finsbury.⁵

⁴ Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.] I do not plainly see what is a woman's fault. JOHNSON.

It is a woman's fault, is spoken ironically. FARMER.

This is a proverbial expression. I find it in The Birth of Merlin, 1662:

"'Tis a woman's fault: p—— of this badfulness,"

Again:

"A woman's fault, we are subject to it, sir,"

Again, in Greene's Planetomachie, 1586: "—— a woman's faulte, to thrust away that with her little finger, whiche they pull to them with both their hands."

I believe the meaning is this: Hotspur having declared his resolution neither to have his head broken, nor to sit still, Billy adds, that such is the usual fault of women; i. e. never to do what they are bid or desired to do. STEEVENS.

The whole tenor of Hotspur's conversation in this scene shews, that the silliness which he here imputes to women as a fault, was something very different from silence; and that an idea was crunched under these words, which may be better understood than explained.—He is still in the Welsh lady's bedchamber. WHITE.

⁵ As if thou never walk'dst further than Finsbury.] Open walks

Swear me, Kate, like a lady, as thou art,
 A good mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth,
 And such protest of pepper-gingerbread,⁶
 To velvet-guards,⁷ and funday-citizens.
 Come sing.

and fields near Chiswell-street, London Wall, by Moorgate; the common resort of the citizens, as appears from many of our ancient comedies. I suppose the verse originally (but elliptically) ran thus:

As thou w'rt walk'dst further than Finsbury.

i. e. as if thou ne'er kc. STEEVENS.

⁶ — [such protest of pepper-gingerbread,] i. e. protestations as common as the letters which children learn from an alphabet of ginger-bread. What we now call spice ginger-bread was then called pepper ginger-bread. STEEVENS.

Such protestations as are uttered by the makers of gingerbread.

MALONE.

Hotpur had just told his wife that she "swore like a campfire-maker's wife;" such protests therefore of pepper ginger-bread, as "in sooth," &c. were to be left to persons of that class.

HENLEY.

⁷ — [velvet-guards,] To such as have their clothes adorned with threads of velvet, which was, I suppose, the surety of cockneys. JOHNSON.

"The cloaks, doublets, &c. (says Stubbs, in his Anatomic of Abuse) were guarded with velvet guards, or else laced with costly lace." Speaking of women's gowns, he adds: "they must be guarded with great guards of velvet, every guard four or six fingers broad at the least."

So, in The Malcontent, 1606:

"You are in good safe since you came to court; guarded, guarded:

"Yes faith, even footmen and bawds wear velvet."

Velvet guards appear, however, to have been a city fashion. So, in Hibernian, 1610:

"Nay, I myself will wear the charthy grace:

"Out on these velvet guards, and black-lac'd sleeves,

"These suspicious fashions simply followed!"

Again:

"I like this jewel; I'll have his fellow.—"

"How?—you?—what fellow it?—grp, velvet-guards!"

STEEVENS.

LADY P. I will not sing,

HOT. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-breast teacher.* An the indentures be drawn, I'll

To select guards means, I believe, to the higher rank of female citizens, the wives of either merchants or wealthy shopkeepers. It appears from the following passage in The London Pindar, 1605, that a guarded gown was the best dress of a city lady in the time of our author:

"Francis, But Tom, must I go as I do now, when I am married?

"Cibet. No, Francis, [i. e. Frances,] I'll have thee go like a citizen, in a guarded gown, and a French hood."

Fynes Morsion is still more express to the same point, and furnishes us with the best comment on the words before us. Describing the dress of the various orders of the people of England, he says, "At public meetings the aldermen of London weere skarlet gownes, and their wives a close gowne of skarlet, with guards of black velvet." STW. fol. 1617, P. 1st. p. 179. See Vol. VI. p. 108, n. 2. MALONE.

* 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, &c.] I suppose Percy means, that singing is a mean quality, and therefore he excuses his lady.

JOHNSON.

The next way—is the nearest way. So, in Liagaa, &c. 1607: "The quadrature of a circle; the philosopher's stone; and the next way to the Indies." Tailors seem to have been as remarkable for singing, as weavers, of whose musical turn Shakspeare has more than once made mention. Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Knight of the Burning Pestle, speak of this quality in the former: "Never trust a tailor that does not sing at his work; his mind is on nothing but hiching."

The honourable Daines Barrington observes, that "a gold-finch still continues to be called a prand tailor, in some parts of England; (particularly Warwickshire, Shakspeare's native country) which renders this passage intelligible, that otherwise seems to have no meaning whatsoever." Perhaps this bird is called a prand tailor, because his plumage is variegated like a suit of clothes made out of remnants of different colours, such as a tailor might be supposed to wear. The sense then will be this:—The next thing to singing oneself, is to teach birds to sing, the goldfinch and the robin. I hope the poet means to inculcate, that singing is a quality destructive to its possessor; and that after a person has ruined himself by it, he may be reduced to the necessity of instructing birds in an art which can render birds alone more valuable.

STEVENS.

away within these two hours; and so come in when ye will. [Exit.

GLENO. Come, come, lord Mortimer; you are as slow,

As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.

By this our book's drawn;⁹ we'll but seal, and then To horse immediately.

MORT.

With all my heart.

[Exitunt.

One instance may suffice, to shew that next has been rightly interpreted: "—and when matters was done, the erles and the lordes went the next way to the deane's place to breckfast." Jves's Select Papers, 410. 1773, p. 165.

This passage has been interpreted as if the latter member of the sentence were explanatory of the former; but surely they are entirely distinct. The plain meaning is, that he who makes a common practice of singing, reduces himself to the condition either of a tailor, or a teacher of musick to birds. That tailors were remarkable for singing in our author's time, he has himself informed us elsewhere. "Oo you make an alchouse of my lady's house, (says Malvolio in Twelfth Night.) that ye squeak out your scourrs' cattrils, without any mitigation or remorse of voice?"

MALONE.

⁹ —our book's drawn;] i. e. our articles. Every composition, whether play, ballad, or history, was called a book, on the registers of ancient publication. STEEVENS.

SCENE II.

London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King HENRY, Prince of Wales, and Lords.

K. HEN. Lords, give us leave; the prince of Wales and I,

Must have some conference: But be near at hand,³
For we shall presently have need of you.—

[Exit Lords.]

I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing service⁴ I have done,
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;
But thou dost, in thy passages of life,⁵
Make me believe,—that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven,
To punish my misreadings. Tell me else,
Could'st such inordinate, and low desires,
Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts,⁶

³ Must have some conference: But be near at hand,] The old copies redundantly read—some private conference; but, as the lords were dismissed on this occasion, they would naturally infer that privacy was the king's object. STEEVENS.

⁴ For some displeasing service—] Service for action, simply.

WARBURTON.

⁵ — in thy passages of life,] i. e. in the passages of thy life.

STEEVENS.

⁶ — such lewd, such mean attempts,] Mean attempts, are mean, unworthy undertakings. Lewd does not in this place barely signify wanton, but licentious. So, B. Jonson, in his Postaster:

"——— great actions may be su'd

"Gainst such as wrong men's fames with verses lewd."

Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd withal, and grafted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood,
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

P. HEN. So please your majesty, I would, I could Quit all offences with as clear excuse,
As well as, I am doubtless, I can purge
Myself of many I am charg'd withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg,⁷
As, in reproof of many tales devis'd,⁸—
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,—
By smiling pick-thanks⁹ and base newsmongers,
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faulty wander'd and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

K. HEN. God pardon thee!—yet let me wonder,
Harry,
At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,¹⁰

And again, in Volpone:

"—they are most lewd impossibles,

"Made all of terms and shreds." STEEVENS.

The word is thus used in many of our ancient statutes.

MALONE.

⁷ Yet such extenuation let me beg, &c. } The construction is somewhat obscure. Let me beg so much extenuation, that, upon satisfaction of many false charges, I may be pardoned some that are true. I should read on reproof, instead of in reproof; but concerning Shakspeare's particles there is no certainty. JOHNSON.

⁸ As in reproof of many tales devis'd, } Reproof here means disproof. M. MASON.

⁹ —pick-thanks— } i. e. officious parasites. So, in the tragedy of Marion, 1613:

"Base pick-thank devil—." STEEVENS.

Again, in Epithes, 1587: "I should seeme either to pick a thence with men, or a quarrel with women." HENRICKSON.

¹⁰ Thy place in council thou hast rudely left, } The Prince was re-

Which by thy younger brother is supplied;
 And art almost an alien to the hearts
 Of all the court and princes of my blood:
 The hope and expectation of thy time
 Is ruin'd; and the soul of every man
 Prophetically does forethink thy fall.
 Had I so lavish of my presence been,
 So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
 So stale and cheap to vulgar company;
 Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
 Had still kept loyal to possession;³
 And left me in reputation's banishment,
 A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood.
 By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
 But, like a comet, I was wonder'd at;
 That men would tell their children, This is he;
 Others would say,—Where? which is Bolingbroke?
 And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,⁴ moved from being president of the council, immediately after he struck the judge. STEVENS.

Our author has, I believe, here been guilty of an anachronism. The prince's removal from council in consequence of his striking the Lord Chief Justice Gatenby, was some years after the battle of Shrewsbury (1403). His brother, Thomas Duke of Clarence, was appointed President of the Council in his room, and he was not created a duke till the 13th year of K. Henry IV. (1411).

MALONE.

³ — loyal to possession; } True to him that had then possession of the crown. JOHNSON.

⁴ And then I stole all courtesy from heaven, } This is an allusion to the story of Prometheus's theft, who stole fire from thence; and as with this he made a man, so with that Bolingbroke made a king.
 As the gods were supposed jealous in appropriating wisdom to themselves, the getting fire from thence, which lighted it up in the mind, was called a theft; and as power is their prerogative, the getting courtesy from thence, by which power is best procured, is called a theft. The thought is exquisitely great and beautiful.

WARBURTON.

Maffinger has adopted this expression in The great Duke of Florence?

And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts;⁵
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh, and new;

" ————— Giovanni,

" A prince in expectation, when he liv'd here,

" Stole courtesy from heaven; and would out to

" The meanest servant in my father's house

" Have kept such distance." STEEVENS.

Dr. Warburton's explanation of this passage appears to me very questionable. The poet had not, I believe, a thought of Prometheus or the heathen gods, nor indeed was courtesy (even understanding it to signify affability) the characteristic attribute of those deities. — The meaning, I apprehend, is, — I was so affable and popular, that I engrossed the devotion and reverence of all men to myself, and thus defrauded Heaven of its worshippers.

Courtesy may be here used for the respect and obedience paid by an inferior to a superior. So, in this play:

" To dog his heels and courtesy at his frowns."

In As V. it is used for a respectful salute, in which sense it was applied formerly to men as well as women:

" I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,

" That he shall shrink under my courtesy."

Again, in the History of Edward IV. annexed to Hardyng's Chronicle, 1543: — "which thing if I could have forfene, — I would never have wonne the courtesy of men's knees with the loss of so many heades."

This interpretation is strengthened by the two subsequent lines, which contain a kindred thought:

" And dress'd myself in such humility,

" That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts."

Henry, I think, means to say, that he robbed Heaven of its worship, and the king of the allegiance of his subjects. MALONE.

⁵ That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,] Apparently copied from Malowe's Lust's Dominion, written before 1593:

" The pope shall feed his bulls through all thy realm,

" And pull obedience from thy subjects' hearts."

In another place in the same play, we meet with the phrase used here:

" ————— Then here upon my knees

" I pluck allegiance from her." MALONE.

My presence, like a robe pontifical,
 Ne'er seen, but wonder'd at;⁶ and so my state,
 Seldom, but sumptuous, showed like a feast;
 And won, by rareness, such solemnity.
 The skipping king, he ambled up and down
 With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits,⁷
 Soon kindled, and soon burn'd: carded his state;⁸

⁶ *My presence, like a robe pontifical,
 Ne'er seen, but wonder'd at;* So, in our author's 52d Sonnet:

"Or as the wardrobe, which the robe doth hide,

"To make some special instant special-bless,

"By new unfolding his imprison'd pride." MALONE.

⁷ — rash bavin wits; Rash, is heady, thoughtless. Bavin is bullwood, which, hard, bites fiercely, but is soon out.

JOHNSON.

So, in Mother Bombie, 1594: "Bavins will have their fashies, and youth their fantries, the one as soon quenched as the other burnt." Again, in Greene's Never too late, 1606: "Love is like a bavin, but a blaze." STEEVENS.

Rash is, I believe, force, violent. So, in King Richard II:

"His rash heire blaze of riot cannot last."

In Shakspeare's time bavin was used for kindling fires. See Florio's Second Fruits, 4to. 1591, rh. i: "There is no fire.—Make a little blaze with a bavin." MALONE.

⁸ — carded his state; Dr. Warburton supposes that raided or 'fraided, (for so he would read,) means distracted, threw it off.

MALONE.

The metaphor seems to be taken from mingling coarse wool with fine, and raising them together, whereby the value of the latter is diminished. The King means, that Richard mingled and carded together his royal state with raving fools, &c. A subsequent part of the speech gives a sanction to this explanation:

"For thou hast lost thy princely privilege

"With vile participation."

To raid is used by other writers for, to mix. So, in The Tamer Tamed, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

"But mine is such a drench of balderdash,

"Such a strange raided cummings."

Again, in Greene's Quip for an upstart Courtier, 1600: "—you raid your beer, (if you see your guests begin to get drunk,) half small, half strong," &c. Again, in Nash's Home with you to

Mingled his royalty with canering fools; ¹
 Had his great name profaned with their scorns;

Siffius Walden, &c. 1596: "— he being constrained to belake himself to carded ale." Shakspeare has a similar thought in All's well that ends well: "The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together." The original hint for this note I received from Mr. Toller. STEVENS.

Mr. Stevens very rightly supports the old reading. The word is used by Shelton in his translation of Don Quixote. The Tinker in the introduction to The Taming of the Shrew, was by education a cardmaker. FARMER.

To card does not mean to mix coarse wool with fine, as Mr. M. Mason has justly observed, but simply to work wool with a card or teazel, so as to prepare it for spinning. MALONE.

By carding his fate, the King means that his predecessor set his consequence to hazard, played it away (as a man loses his fortune) at cards. RITSON.

² — canering fools; ³ Thus the quarto, 1598, and rightly, I believe, because such a reading requires no explanation. The other copies, however, have — carping. STEVENS.

Carping is jessing, prating, &c. This word had not yet acquired the sense which it bears in modern speech. Chaucer says of his Wife of Bath, Prol. 470:

"In felawship wele coude she laugh and carpe."

T. WARTON.

The verb, to carpe, is whimsically used by Phaul in his version of the fifth book of the Æneid:

————— esthera vincitur Iopas

Personal ovato.

"————— and on his golden harp

"Iopas with his bushe locks in sweete song gao to carpe."

STEVENS.

In the second quarto, printed in 1599, carping was changed into carping, and that word was transmitted through all the subsequent quartos. Hence, it is also the reading of the folio, which appears to have been printed from the quarto of 1613. Had all the quartos read carping, and the folio carping, the latter reading might derive some strength from the authority of that copy; but the change having been made arbitrarily, or by chance, in 1599, it has no pretension of that kind.

It may be further observed, that "canering fools" were very proper companions for a "skipping king;" and that Falstaff in the second part of this play, boasts of his being able to carpe, as a

And gave his countenance, against his name,²
To laugh at gibing boys,³ and stand the push proof of his youth. "To approve my youth further I will not; the truth is, I am old in judgement and understanding; and he that will reape with me for a thousand marks," &c.

Carping undoubtedly might also have been used with propriety; having had in our author's time the same signification as at present; though it has been doubted. Mistheo explains it in his Dist. 167, thus, "To munt, to find fault with, or bite with words."

It is observable that in the original copy the word raping is exhibited without an apostrophe, according to the usual practice of that time. So, in Maslowe's Hist and Travels, 1598:

"Whereat the English-visag'd god grew proud,
"And made his raping Triton sound aloud."

The original reading is also strongly confirmed by Henry's description of the raping fools, who, he supposes, will immediately alter his dearth hock round his son:

"Now, neighbour confuser, purge you of your stum;
"Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance,
"Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit
"The oldest sin the newell kind of way," &c.

A carper did not mean (as has been supposed) a peating jester, but a cynical fellow. So, in Timon of Athens:

"—Shame not these woods
"By putting on the cunning of a carper."

It cannot be supposed that the King meant to reproach the luxurious Richard with keeping company with four morose cynicks.

MALONE.

² And gave his countenance, against his name,] Made his presence injurious to his reputation. JOHNSON.

I doubt the propriety of Johnson's explanation of this passage; and should rather suppose the meaning of it to be, "that he favoured and encouraged things that were contrary to his dignity and reputation." To countenance, or to give countenance to, are common expressions, and mean, to patronise or encourage.

M. MASON.

Against his name, &c. I think, parenthetical. He gave his countenance, (in the diminution of his name or character,) to laugh, &c. In plain English, he honoured glibbing boys with his company, and dishonoured himself by joining in their mirth.

MALONE.

³ To laugh at gibing boys,] i. e. at the jests of gibing boys.

MALONE.

Of every beardless vain comparative :^b
 Grew a companion to the common streets,
 Enfeoff'd himself to popularity :^c
 That, being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,^d
 They surfeited with honey ; and began

^a Of every beardless vain comparative : } Of every boy whose vanity incited him to try his wit against the king's.

When Lewis XIV. was asked, why, with so much wit, he never attempted satillery, he answered, that he who studied satillery ought to bear it in his turn, and that to stand the butt of satillery was not suitable to the dignity of a king. Scudery's Conversation.
 JOHNSON.

Comparative, I believe, is equal, or rival in any thing ; and may therefore signify, in this place,—every one who, thought himself on a level with the Prince. So, in the second of his Four Plays in One, by Beaumont and Fletcher :

" ——— Genard ever was
 " His full comparative." STEPHENS.

I believe comparative means here, one who affects wit, a dealer in comparisons: what Shakspeare calls, somewhere else, as I remember right, a smile-monger. "The most comparative prince" has already occurred in the play before us ; and the following passage in Love's Labour's Lost, is yet more apposite in support of this interpretation :

" ——— The world's large tongue
 " Proclaim you for a man replete with mocks,
 " Full of comparisons, and wounding flouts." MALONE

^b Enfeoff'd himself to popularity : } To enfeoff is a law term, signifying to invest with possession. So, in the old comedy of Wily Beguiled: "I protested to enfeoff her in forty pounds a year."
 STEPHENS.

Gave himself up absolutely and entirely to popularity. A feofment was the ancient mode of conveyance, by which all lands in England were granted in fee-simple for several ages, till the conveyance of Lease and Release was invented by Serjeant Moor, about the year 1630. Every deed of feofment was accompanied with livery of seisin, that is, with the delivery of corporal possession of the land or tenement granted in fee. MALONE.

^c That, being daily swallow'd by men's eyes, } Nearly the same expression occurs in A Warning for faire Women, a tragedy, 1599:

"The people's eye have fed them with my sight."

MALONE.

To loath the taste of sweetness, whereof a little
 More than a little is by much too much.
 So, when he had occasion to be seen,
 He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
 Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
 As, sick and blunted with community,
 Afford no extraordinary gaze,
 Such as is bent on sun-like majesty
 When it shines seldom in admiring eyes:
 But rather drowz'd, and hung their eyelids down,
 Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
 As cloudy men use to their adversaries;³
 Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full.
 And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou:⁴
 For thou hast lost thy princely privilege,
 With vile participation; not an eye
 But is a-weary of thy common sight,
 Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
 Which now doth that I would not have it do,
 Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. HEN. I shall hereafter; my thrice gracious
 lord,
 Be more myself.

K. HEN. For all the world,⁵
 As thou art to this hour, was Richard then
 When I from France set foot at Ravenspurg;

³ As cloudy men use to their adversaries;] Strada, in his imitation of Statius, describing the look thrown by the German on his Portuguese antagonist, has the same expression:

Infadempue tuens, et amara oculus ore. STEEVENS.

⁴ And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou:] So, in The Merchant of Venice:

"In this predicament, I say, thou stand'st." STEEVENS.

⁵ For all the world,] "Sir T. Hanmer, to complete the verse, reads—

Harry, for all the world,— STEEVENS.

And even as I was then, is Percy now.
 Now by my scepter, and my soul to boot,
 He hath more worthy interest to the state,
 Than thou, the shadow of succession:³
 For, of no right, nor colour like to right,
 He doth fill fields with harness in the realm;
 Turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
 And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
 Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on,
 To bloody battles, and to bruising arms.
 What never-dying honour hath he got Against renowned Douglas; whose high deeds,
 Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms,
 Holds from all soldiers chief majority,
 And military title capital,
 Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ?
 Thrice hath this Hotspur Mars in swathing clothes,
 This infant warrior, in his enterprizes

³ He hath more worthy interest to the state,

Than thou, the shadow of succession; This is obsolete. I believe the meaning is—Hotspur hath a right to the kingdom more worthy than thou, who hath only the shadow right of lineal succession, while he has real and solid power. JOHNSON.

Rather,—He better deserves to inherit the kingdom than thyself, who art intitled by birth to that succession of which thy vices render thee unworthy. RITSON.

To have an interest to any thing, is not English. If we read,

He hath more worthy interest in the state, the sense would be clear, and agreeable to the tenor of the rest of the King's speech. M. MASON.

I believe the meaning is only, he hath more popularity in the realm, more weight with the people, than thou the best apparent to the throne.—

"From thy possession bar me, father; I "Am heir to my succession—"

says Florisel, in The Winter's Tale

We should now write—in the state, but there is no corruption in the text. So, in The Winter's Tale: "—he is less hequent to his princely exercises than formerly," MALONE.

Discomfited great Douglas: ta'en him once,
 Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
 To fill the mouth of deep defiance up,
 And shake the peace and safety of our throne,
 And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
 The archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,
 Capitulate⁴ against us, and are up,
 But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?
 Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
 Which art my near'st and dearest⁵ enemy?
 Thou that art like enough,—through vassal fear,
 Base inclination, and the start of spleen,—
 To fight against me under Percy's pay,
 To dog his heels, and court'fy at his frowns,
 To show how much degenerate thou art.

P. HEN. Do not think so, you shall not find it so;
 And God forgive them, that so much have sway'd
 Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!
 I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
 And, in the closing of some glorious day,
 Be bold to tell you, that I am your son;
 When I will wear a garment all of blood,
 And stain my favours in a bloody mask,⁶

⁴ Capitulate—] i. e. make head. So, to articulate, in a subsequent scene, is to form articles. STEEVENS.

Rather, combine, confederate, indent. To capitulate is to draw up any thing in heads or articles. Johnson's Dictionary. RITSON.

To capitulate, Minsheu explains thus: "—per capita seu articulos pacis;" and nearly in this sense, I believe, it is used here. The Percies, we are told by Walsingham, sent about letters containing three articles, or principal grievances, on which their rising was founded: and to this perhaps our author alludes.

MALONE.

⁵ ——— dearest —] Dearest is most fatal, most mischievous.

JOHNSON.

⁶ And stain my favours in a bloody mask,] We should read—favours, i. e. countenance. WARRINGTON.

Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it.
 And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights,
 That this same child of honour and renown,
 This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
 And your unthought-of Harry, chance to meet:
 For every honour sitting on his helm,
 'Would they were multitudes; and on my head
 My shames redoubled! for the time will come,
 That I shall make this northern youth exchange
 His glorious deeds for my indignities.
 Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
 To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;
 And I will call him to so strict account,
 That he shall render every glory up,
 Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
 Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
 This, in the name of God, I promise here:
 The which if he be pleas'd I shall perform.
 I do beseech your majesty, may save
 The long-grown wounds of my intemperance:
 If not, the end of life cancels all bands;⁶

Favours are features. JOHNSON.

I am not certain that favours, in this place, means features, or that the plural number of favours in that sense is ever used. I believe favours mean only some decoration usually worn by knights in their helmets, as a present from a mistress, or a trophy from an enemy. So, afterwards in this play:

"Then let my favours hide thy mangled face!"
 where the Prince must have meant his scarf.

Again, in Heywood's Rehe of Lucresse, 1630:

"Arms, these crimson favours, for thy sake,
 "I'll wear upon my forehead mark'd with blood."

STEEVENS.
 Steevens's explanation of this passage appears to be right. The word garments, in the preceding line, seems to confirm it.

M. MASON.
⁶ —cancels all bands;] i. e. ends, for thus the word was antiently spelt. So, in The Comedy of Errors:

"My master is attested on a band."

And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.

K. HEN. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:—
Thou shalt have charge, and sovereign trust, herein.

Enter BLUNT.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.

BLUNT. So hath the business that I come to speak of.⁷

Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,⁸—
That Douglas, and the English rebels, met,
The eleventh of this month, at Shrewsbury:
A mighty and a fearful head they are,

Shakspeare has the same allusion in Macbeth:

"Crown and tear to pieces that great bond," &c.

Again, in Cymbeline:

"And crown these rold bonds." STEEVENS.

7 So hath the business that I come to speak of.} So also the business that I come to speak of, hath speed; i. e. requires immediate attention and dispatch. Mr. Pope changed hath to is, and the alteration has been adopted, in my opinion unnecessarily, by the subsequent editors. MALONE.

* Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,} There was no such person as lord Mortimer of Scotland; but there was a lord March of Scotland, (George Douglas,) who having quitted his own country in disgust, attached himself so warmly to the English, and did them such signal services in their wars with Scotland, that the Parliament petitioned the King to bestow some reward on him. He fought on the side of Henry in this rebellion, and was the means of saving his life at the battle of Shrewsbury, as is related by Holinshed. This, no doubt, was the lord whom Shakspeare designed to represent in the act of sending friendly intelligence to the King.—Our author had a recollection that there was in these wars a Scottish lord on the King's side, who bore the same title with the English family, on the rebel side, (one being the Earl of March in England, the other Earl of March in Scotland,) but his memory deceived him as to the particular name which was common to both. He took it to be Mortimer, instead of March.

STEEVENS.

If promises be kept on every hand,
As ever offer'd foul play in a state.

K. HEN. The earl of Westmoreland set forth to-day;

With him my son, lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement is five days old:—
On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set
Forward; on Thursday, we ourselves will march:
Our meeting is Bridgnorth: and, Harry, you Shall march through Gloucestershire; by which account,
Our business valued, some twelve days hence
Our general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet.
Our hands are full of business: let's away;
Advantage feeds him fat,⁹ while men delay.

[Exeunt:

SCENE III.

Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

FAL. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am wither'd like an old apple-John. Well, ⁹ Advantage feeds him fat,] i. e. feeds himself. MALONE.

So, in The Taming of a Shrew:

"Who, for twice seven years, hath esteemed him

"No better than a poor and a loathsome beggar."

STEEVENS.

⁹ — my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown;] Pope has in the Dunciad availed himself of this idea:

"In a dun night-gown of his own loose skin."

;

MALONE;

I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking;³ I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse:⁴ the inside of a church:⁵ Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.

BARD. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

FAL. Why, there is it:—come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given, as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough: swore little; diced, not above seven times a week; went ³ — while I am in some liking.] While I have some flesh, some substance. We have had well-liking in the same sense in a former play. MALONE.

So, in the book of Job, xxxix. 4: "—their young ones are in good liking." STEEVENS.

⁴ — a brewer's horse.] I suppose a brewer's horse was apt to be lean with hard work. JOHNSON.

A brewer's horse does not, perhaps, mean a day-horse, but the cross-beam on which beers-bassels, are carried into cellars, &c. The allusion may be to the ropes form of this machine.

A brewer's horse, however, is mentioned in Aristippus, or The Jovial Philosophers, 1630: "—to think Helicon a barrel of bees, is at great a sin as to call Pegasus a brewer's horse." STEEVENS.

The commentators seem not to be aware, that, in allusions of this sort, Falstaff does not mean to point out any similitude to his own condition, but on the contrary, some striking dissimilitude. He says here, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse; just as in Act II. sc. iv. he asserts the truth of several parts of his narrative, on pain of being considered as a rogue—a Jew—an English Jew—a bunch of raddish—a horse. TRENHART.

⁵ — the inside of a church.] The latter words (the inside of a church) were, I suspect, repeated by the mistake of the scribes. As Falstaff may be here only repeating his former words—The inside of a church!—without any connection with the words immediately preceding. My first conjecture appears to me the most probable. MALONE.

to a bawdy-house, not above once in a quarter—of an hour: paid money that I borrow'd, three or four times; liv'd well, and in good compass: and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

BARD. Why, you are so fat, fir John, that you must needs be out of all compass; out of all reasonable compass, fir John.

FAL. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: Thou art our admiral,⁵ thou bearest the lantern in the poop,—but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp.⁶

BARD. Why, fir John, my face does you no harm.

FAL. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a memento mori: I never see thy face, but I think up-

⁵ — Thou art our admiral, &c.] Decker, in his Wonderful Years, 1603, has the same thought. He is describing the Host of a country inn: "An antiquary might have pickt rare matter out of his nose. — The Hamburgers offered I know not how many dollars for his companion in an East-Indian voyage, to have Roode a nights in the Poop of their Admirall, only to save the charges of candles." STEEVENS.

This appears to have been a very old joke. So, in A Dialogue both pleasant and piercing, &c. by Wm. Bulkeley, 1564: "Marie, this fiaz, though he did ride to the queene by darcke night, he needed no candell; his nose was so redde and bright; and although he had but litle money in store in his pouse, yet his nose and cheeks were well set with curial and rubies." MALONE.

⁶ — the knight of the burning lamp.] This is a natural picture. Every man who feels in himself the pain of deformity, however, like this merry knight, he may affect to make sport with it among those whom it is his interest to please, is ready to revenge any blot of contempt upon one whom he can use with freedom.

JOHNSON.

The knight of the burning lamp, and the knight of the burning pillow, are both names invented with a design to ridicule the titles of heroes in ancient romances. STEEVENS.

on hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy fate; my oath should be, By this fire: ⁷ but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou ran'st up Gads-hill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, ⁸ an everlasting bonfire-light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, ⁹

⁷ — By this fire:] Here the quartos 1599, and 1608, very prolouely add: — that's God's angel. This passage is perhaps alluded to in Hysteronproteron, 1670, where Ainsius says: "By this candle (which is none of God's angels) I remember you started back at spirit and flame." Mr. Henley, however observes, that "by the extinction of the word now omitted, the intended antithesis is lost."

STEEVENS.

⁸ — thou art a perpetual triumph,] So, in King Henry VI. Part III:

"And what now lasts but that we speed the time

"With stately triumphs, mouthful comic shows,

"Such as befit the pleasures of the court."

A Triumph was a general term for any public exhibition, such as a royal marriage, a grand procession, &c. &c. which commonly being at night, were attended by multitudes of torch-bearers.

STEEVENS:

⁹ — Thou hast saved me a thousand marks &c.] This passage stands in need of no explanation; but I cannot help seizing the opportunity to mention that in Shakspeare's time, (long before the streets were illuminated with lamps,) candles and lanterns to let, were cried about London. So, in Decker's Satiromastix: — "dost thou ha't a good counceillal voice to cry lantern and candle light." Again, in Heywood's Rape of Lucretia, among the Cries of London:

"Lantern and candlelight here,

"Maid ha' light here.

"Thus go the cries," &c.

Again, in K. Edward IV. 1676:

"No more calling of lantern and candlelight."

walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the fact that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me lights as good cheap, * at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire, any time this two and thirty years; Heaven reward me for it!

BARD. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your belly!

FAL. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burn'd.

Enter Hostess.

How now, dame Partlet³ the hen? have you inquired yet, who pick'd my pocket?

Again, in Pierce Pennys's Supplication to the Devil, 1593: "It is said that you went up and down London, crying like a lantern and saddle man." STEEVENS.

* — good cheap, [Chap is market, and good cheap therefore is a bon marche. JOHNSON.

So, in Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay, 1599:

"If this weather hold, we shall have hay good cheap."

Again, in the anonymous play of K. Henry V.

"Perhaps thou may'st agree better cheap oow."

And again, in these two proverbs:

"They buy good cheap that bring nothing home."

"He'll oe'er have thing good cheap that's afraid to ask the price."

Chap (as Dr. Johnson has observed) is undoubtedly an old word for market. So, in the ancient metrical romance of Sir Bevis of Hampton, bl. l. no date:

"Tyll he came to the chape

"There he founde many meo of a hepe."

From this word, East-chap, Chap-flow, Chap-side, &c. are derived; indeed a passage that follows in Sir Bevis may seem to fix the derivation of the latter:

"So many men was dead,

"The Chape side was of blode red." STEEVENS.

³ — dame Partlet —] Dame Partlet is the name of the hen

HOST. Why, sir John! what do you think, sir John? Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have search'd, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before.

FAL. You lie, hostess; Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair: and I'll be sworn, my pocket was pick'd: Go to, you are a woman, go.

HOST. Who I? I defy thee: I was never call'd so in mine own house before.

FAL. Go to, I know you well enough.

HOST. No, sir John; you do not know me, sir John: I know you, sir John: you owe me money, sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

FAL. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

HOST. Now, 'as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

FAL. He had his part of it; let him pay.

HOST. He? alas, he is poor; be bath nothing.

FAL. How! poor? look upon his face; What call you rich?⁴ let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks; I'll not pay a denier. What, will in the old story-book of Reynard the Fox: and in Chaucer's tale of The Cock and the Fox, the favourite hen is called dame Pertelote.

Servens.

⁴ ——— What call you rich? } A face set with carbuncles is called a rich face. Legend of Capt. Jones. JOHNSON.

you make a younker of me?⁴ Shall I not to mine case in mine inn, but I shall have my ket pick'd?⁵ I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfa
 's, worth forty mark.⁶

⁴ — a younker of me?} A younker is a novice, a young inexperienced man easily gull'd. So, in Galconne's Gloss for Government, 1575:

"These younkers shall pay for the roste."

See Spenser's Eclogue de May, and Sir Tho. Smith's Commuavialth of England, Book I. ch. xxiii.

Thus contemptuous distinction is likewise very common in the old plays. Thus, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Elder Brother:

"I fear he'll make an ass of me, a younker."

I learn, however, from Smith's Sea-Grammar, 1627, (there was an earlier edition,) that one of the senses of the term — younker, was "the young men" employed "to take in the top-gales." They are mentioned as distinct characters from the sailors, who "are the excise" on a ship hoisting the sails, &c. STRICKLAND.

⁵ — ket pick'd?} ket must not be mistaken for ket. ket was my poet's pick'd? There is a peculiar force in ket. To ket must ket to must ket, was an ancient proverb, not very different in its application from that maxim, "Every man's house is his castle;" for ket originally signified a house or habitation, [Sax.
hæne, domus, domicilium.] When the word ket began to change its meaning, and to be used to signify a house of entertainment, the proverb, still continuing in force, was applied in the latter sense, as it is here used by Shakspeare: or, perhaps Falstaff here humor-ously puns upon the word ket, to signify to represent the wrong done him more strongly.

In John Heywood's Works imprinted at London, 1598, quarto, vol. I. is "a dialogue wherein are pleasantly contrived the number of all the effectual proverbs in our English tongue, &c. together with three hundred epigrams on three hundred proverbs." In ch. vi. is the following:

"Refty welth willeth me the widow to winne,

"To let the world wag, and take mine case is mine ket."

And among the epigrams is: { 26. Of Ease in an Inn. }

"Thou ketst thee ketst in thine ket so nye thee,

"That no man in his inn can take case by thee."

Otherwise:

"Thou ketst thine ket in thine inn, but I see,

"Thine inn taketh neither case nor profit by thee."

Now is the first of these distichs the word ket is used in its ancient meaning, being spoken by a person who is about to marry

HOST. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him,
I know not how oft, that that ring was copper.

FAL. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup; and, if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would lay so.

Enter Prince HENRY and POINS, marching. FAL-STAFF meets the Prince, playing on his lutecheon, like a fife.

FAL. How now, lad? is the wind in that door, i'faith? must we all march?

a widow for the sake of a home, &c. In the two last places, inn seems to be used in the sense it bears at present. PRACH.

Gabriel Harvey, in a MS. note to Spenser's Chaucer, say, "Some of Heywood's epigrams are supposed to be the conceits and devices of pleasant Sir Thomas More."

Inn for a habitation, or a recess, is frequently used by Spenser and other ancient writers. So, in A World aspe'd at Tynd, 1620: "These great rich men must take their rest in their Inns." Again, in Greene's Forewell to Follie, 1617: "The beggar bus that haunred the palace of Penelope, would take his rest in his inn, as well as the peeres of Ithaca," STEVENS.

I believe inn differed from castles, in not being of so much consequence and extent, and more particularly in not being fortified.—So Inns of court, and in the universities, before the endowment of colleges. Thus, Trinity college, Cambridge, was made out of and built on the site of several inns. LORT.

"—a feasting of my grandfather's, worth forty mark.] This seems to have been the usual price of such a mug about Falstaff's time. In the printed Rolls of Parliament, Vol. VI. p. 140, we meet with "A signet of gold, to the value of XL markes."

REYDON.

"—the prince is a Jack.] This term of contempt occurs frequently in our authors. In The Taming of the Shrew, Katharine calls her mulish-maller, in decision, a twanging Jack. MAZONS.

This term is likewise met with in Ulysses, The Merchant of Venice, Cymbeline, &c. &c. but is still so much in use, as scarcely to need exemplification. STEVENS.

BARD. Yea, two and two, Newgate-fashion.⁷

HOST. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. HEN. What say'st thou, mistress Quickly?
How does thy husband? I love him well, he is an honest man.

HOST. Good my lord, hear me.

FAL. Pr'ythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. HEN. What say'st thou, Jack?

FAL. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras, and had my pocket pick'd: this house is turn'd hawdy-house, they pick pockets.

P. HEN. What didst thou lose, Jack?

FAL. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four honds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

P. HEN. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

HOST. So I told him, my lord; and I said, I heard your grace say so: And, my lord, he speaks most vitely of you, like a foul-mouth'd man as he is; and said, he would cudgel you.

P. HEN. What! he did not?

HOST. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

FAL. There's no more faith in thee than in a stew'd prune;⁸ nor no more truth in thee, than in ⁷ — Newgate-fashion] As prisoners are conveyed to Newgate, fastened two and two together. JOHNSON.

So, in Decker's Satiromastix, 1601: "Why then, come; we'll walk arm in arm, as though we were leading one another to Newgate." REED.

⁸ There's no more faith in thee than in a stew'd prune; &c.] The propriety of these similes I am not sure that I fully understand. A stew'd prune has the appearance of a prune, but has no taste. A drawn fox, that is, an exenterated fox, has the form of a fox a drawn fox;² and for womanhood, maid Marian without his powers. I think Dr. Warburton's explanation wrong, which makes a drawn fox to mean a fox often hunted; though to draw is a hunter's term for pursuit by the track. My interpretation makes the fox suit better to the prunes. These are very slender disquisitions, but such is the talk of a commentator.

JOHNSON.

Dr. Lodge, in his pamphlet called Wit's Misery, or the World's Madhouse, 1596, describes a bawd thus: "This is shee that laies waite at all the carriers for wooches new come up to London; and you shall know her dwelling by a dish of stew'd prunes in the window; and two or three flouting wenchet sit knitting or sowing in her shop."

In Measure for Measure, Act II. the male bawd excuses himself for having admitted Elbow's wife into his house, by saying, "that she came to great with child, and longing for stew'd prunes, which stood in a dish," &c.

SleNDER, in The Merry Wives of Windsor, who apparently wishes to recommend himself to his mistress by a seeming propensity to love as well as war, talks of having measured weapons with a fencing-master for a dish of stew'd prunes.

In another old dramatic piece entitled, If this be not a good Play the Devil is in it, 1612, a bravo coxens with money, and says, "This is the pension of the stewes, you need not notice it; 'tis stew-money, sir, stew'd prune cash, sir."

Among the other sin laid to the charge of the once celebrated Gabriel Harvey, by his antagonist-NASH, "to be drunk with the sirup or liquor of stew'd prunes," is not the least infilled oo.

Again, in Decker's Heart's Whore, P. II. 1630: "Peace! two dishes of stew'd prunes, a bawd and a pander!" Again, in Northward Ho, by Decker and Webster, 1606, a bawd says, "I will have but six stew'd prunes in a dish, and some of mother Wall's cakes; for my best customers are tailors." Again, in The Noble Stranger, 1640: "— to be drunk with cream and stew'd prunes? — Fox on't, bawdy-house fare." Again, in Decker's Seven deadly Sins of London, 1606: "Nay, the sober Perpetuana-suited Puritane, that dares not [so much as by moone-light] come neare the suburb shadow of a house where they set stew'd prunes before you, raps as boldly at the hatch; when he knows Candlelight is within, as if he were a new chosen constable."

The passages already quoted are sufficient to show that a dish of stew'd prunes was not only the ancient designation of a brothel, but the coullant appendage to it.

From A Treatise on the Lust Venerea, written by W. Clowes, one of her majesty's surgeons, 1596, and other books of the same may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. * Go, you thing, go.

kind, it appears that prunes were directed to be boiled in broth for those persons already infected; and that both stew'd prunes and roasted apples were commonly, though unsuccessfully, taken by way of prevention. So much for the infidelity of stew'd prunes.

STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens has so fully discussed the subject of stew'd prunes, that one can add nothing but the price. In a piece called Banci's Bay Horse in a Traire, 1393, we have "A stork of wenches, set up with thris stew'd prunes, oine for a tetter." FARMER.

* — d drawn fox; } A drawn fox may be a fox drawn over the ground, to exercise the hounds. So, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Famer Tamed:

" — that drawn fox Moroso."

Mr. Heath observes, that "a fox drawn over the ground to leave a scent, and exercise the hounds, may be said to have no truth in it, because it derives the hounds, who run with the same eagerness as if they were in pursuit of a real fox."

I am not, however, confident that this explanation is right. It was formerly supposed that a fox, when drawn out of his hole, had the sagacity to counterfeits death, that he might thereby obtain an opportunity to escape. For this information I am indebted to Mr. Tollet, who quotes Olavus Magnus, Lib. XVIII. cap. xxxix; "Insuper sagit se mortuam," &c. This particular and many others relative to the subtility of the fox have been translated by several ancient English writers. STEEVENS.

* — maid Marian may be &c. } Maid Marian is a man dressed like a woman, who attends the dancers of the morris.

JOHNSON.

In the ancient Songs of Robin Hood frequent mention is made of maid Marian, who appears to have been his courtesan. I could quote many passages to my old MS. to this purpose, but shall produce only one:

"Good Robin Hood was living then,

"Which now is quite forgot,

"And so was faire maid Marian," &c. PERCY.

It appears from the old play of The Downfall of Robert Earl of Huntington, 1601, that maid Marian was originally a name assumed by Matilda the daughter of Robert Lord Fitzwater, while Robin Hood remained in a state of outlawry:

"Next 'tis agreed (if thou thee agree)

"That faire Matilda henceforth change her name;

HOST. Say, what thing? what thing?

FAL. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.

HOST. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou should'st know it; I am an honest man's wife: and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

FAL. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

HOST. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

FAL. What beast? why, an otter.

P. HEN. An otter, sir John! why an otter?

FAL. Why? she's neither fish, nor flesh;³ a man knows not where to have her.

¹ And while it is the chance of Robin Hood

² To live in Sherewodde a poor outlawes life,

³ She by maide Marian's name be only call'd.

⁴ Mat. I am contented; reade on, little John:

⁵ Henceforth let me be nam'd maide Marian.

This lady was afterwards poisoned by King John at Dunmow Priory, after he had made several fruitless attempts on her chastity. Drayton has written her legend.

Shakspeare speaks of maid Marian in her degraded state, when she was represented by a strumpet or a clown.

See Figure c. in the plate at the end of this play, with Mr. Toller's observations on it. STEVENS.

Maid Marian seems to have been the lady of a Whitfox-ale, or morris-dance. The widow in Sir William D'Avenant's Love and Honour, (p. 247,) says: "I have been Mistress Marian in a Maurice ere now." Morris is, indeed, there spelt wrong; the dance was not so called from prince Maurice, but from the Spanish morisca, a dancer of the morris or morissh dance. HAWKINS.

There is an old piece entitled, Old Meg of Herefordshire for a Mayd Marian, and Hereford Tawa for a Morris-dance: or 12 Morris-dancers in Herefordshire, of 1200 Years old. Lond. 1609, quarto. It is dedicated to one Hall, a celebrated Labourer in that country. T. WATSON.

³ ——— neither fish, nor flesh] So, the proverb: "Neither fish nor flesh, nor good red herring." STEVENS.

HOST. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou!

P. HEN. Thou say'st true, hostess; and he flanders thee most grossly.

HOST. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, you ought him a thousand pound.

P. HEN. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

FAL. A thousand pound, Hal? a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

HOST. Nay, mylord, he call'd you Jack, and said, he would cudgel you.

FAL. Did I, Bardolph?

BARD. Indeed, sir John, you said so.

FAL. Yea; if he said, my ring was copper.

P. HEN. I say, 'tis copper: Darest thou be as good as thy word now?

FAL. Why, Hal, thou know'st, as thou art but man, I dare: but, as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. HEN. And why not, as the lion?

FAL. The king himself is to be 'fear'd as the lion: Dost thou think, I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God, my girdle break!⁴

⁴ — I pray God, my girdle break!] Alluding to the old adage — "ungirt, unblest." Thus, in the Plantsick Age, bl. l. an ancient ballad:

" Ungirt, unless, the proverb sayes,

" And they, to prove it right,

" Have got a fashion now adayes

" That's odious to the sight;

" Like Frenchmen, all on points they stand,

" No girdles now they wear." &c.

Perhaps this ludicrous imputation is proverbial. So, in 'Tis merry when Gossips meet, a poem, 4to. 1609:

P. HEN. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, firrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine; it is all fill'd up with guts, and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whoreson, impudent, embofs'd rascal,⁵ if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor pennyworth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded; if thy pocket were enrich'd with any other injuries but these, I am a villain.⁶ And yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong:⁷ Art thou not ashamed?

FAL. Dost thou bear, Hal? thou know'st, in the state of innocency, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do, in the days of villainy? Thou seest, I have more flesh than another man; and therefore more frailty,——You confess then, you pick'd my pocket?

P. HEN. It appears so by the story.

"How say'st thou, Belle? shall it be so, girl? speak:

"If I make one, pray God my girdle break!" STEEVENS.

This with had more force formerly than at present, it being once the custom to wear the purse hanging by the girdle; so that its breaking, if not observed by the wearer, was a serious matter.

MALONE.

⁵ ——— impudent, embofs'd rascal,] Embofs'd is swollen, puffy.

JOHNSON.

So, in King Lear:

"A plague-fore, or embofs'd carbuncle." STEEVENS.

⁶ ——— if thy pocket were enrich'd with any other injuries but these, &c.] As the pocketing of injuries was a common phrase, I suppose, the Prince calls the contents of Falstaff's pocket — injuries.

STEEVENS.

⁷ ——— you will not pocket up wrong:] Some part of this merry dialogue seems to have been lost. I suppose Falstaff in pressing the robbery upon his hostess, had declared his resolution not to pocket up wrongs or injuries, to which the Prince alludes. JOHNSON.

FAL. Hostess, I forgive thee: Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest, I am pacified.—Still?—Nay, prythee, be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad,—How is that answer'd?

P. HEN. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee:—The money is paid back again.

FAL. O, I do not like that paying back, 'tis a double labour.

P. HEN. I am good friends with my father, and may do any thing.

FAL. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou do'st, and do it with unwash'd hands too.*

PARD. Do, my lord.

P. HEN. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

FAL. I would, it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two and twenty, or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous; I laud them, I praise them

P. HEN. Bardolph,—

BARD. My lord.

* ——— do it with unwash'd hands too.] i. e. Do it immediately, or the first thing in the morning, even without staying to wash your hands.

So, in The More the Merrier, a collection of Epigrams, 1608:

" ——— as a school boy dotes

" Fall to it wash'd or unwash'd, or said his prayers."

Perhaps, however, Ecce homo alludes to the ancient adage:—Illis manus lavare facio. I find the same expression in Ascalanus, a comedy, 1540: "Why be these holy thynges to be mentid with with unwash'd hands?" STEEVENS.

P. HEN. Go bear this letter to lord John of Lancaster,

My brother John; this to my lord of Westmoreland.—

Go, Poins, to horse,^a to horse; for thou, and I, Have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner time.—

Jack,

Meet me to-morrow i' the Temple-hall

At two o'clock i' the afternoon:

There shalt thou know thy charge; and there receive

Money, and order for their furniture.

The land is burning; Percy stands on high;

And either they, or we, must lower lie.

[Exit Prince, POINS, and BARDOLPH.

FAL. Rare words! brave world?—Hostess, my breakfast; come:—

O, I could wish, this tavern were my drum! [Exit,

^a ——— Poins, to horse,] I cannot but think that Peto is again put for Poins. I suppose the old copy had only a P——. We have Peto afterwards, not riding with the Prince, but lieutenant to Falstaff. JOHNSON.

I have adopted Dr. Johnson's emendation. STEEVENS.

The old copies read—Go, Peto, to horse. In further support of Dr. Johnson's emendation, it may be observed, that Poins suits the metre of the line, which would be destroyed by a word of two syllables. MALONE.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, and DOUGLAS.

HOT. Well said, my noble Scot: If speaking truth,

In this fine age, were not thought flattery.
Such attribution should the Douglas^a have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world.
By heaven, I cannot flatter; I defy
The tongues of soothers; but a braver place
In my heart's love, hath no man than yourself:
Nay, task me to my word; approve me, lord.

DOUG. Thou art the king of honour:
No man so potent breathes upon the ground,
But I will beard him.^b

^a — the Douglas —] This expression is frequent in Holinshed, and is always applied by way of pre-eminence to the head of the Douglas family. STEVENS.

^b But I will beard him.] To beard is to oppose face to face in a hostile or daring manner. So, in Drayton's Quest of Cynthia:

"That it with woodbine durst compare

"And beard the eglantine."

Again, in Macbeth:

"—met them dervful, beard to beard."

This phrase, which soon lost its original signification, appears to have been adopted from romance. In ancient language, to head a man, was to cut off his head, and to beard him, signified to cut off his beard; a punishment which was frequently inflicted by giants on such unfortunate pilces as fell into their hands. So, Drayton in his Polyolbion, Song 4:

"And for a trophy brought the giant's coat away,

"Made of the beards of kings." STEVENS.

HOT. Do so, and 'tis well:—

Enter a Messenger, with Letters.

What letters hast thou there?—I can but thank you.

MESS. These letters come from your father,—

HOT. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

MESS. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.

HOT. 'Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick,

In such a juggling time? Who leads his power:

Under whose government come they along?

MESS. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord.⁴

⁴ Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord.] The old copies—not I my mind, and—not I his mind. STEEVENS.

The line should be read and divided thus:—

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I.

HOT. His mind?

Hotspur had asked, who leads his powers? The Messenger answers, His letters bear his mind. The other replies, His mind? As much as to say, I enquire not about his mind, I want to know where his powers are. This is natural, and perfectly in character.

WARBURTON.

The earliest quarto, 1598, reads—not I my mind;—the compositor having inadvertently repeated the word mind, which had occurred immediately before; an error which often happens at the press. The printer of the third quarto, in 1604, not seeing how the mistake had arisen, in order to obtain some sense, changed my to his, reading, “not I his mind,” which was followed in all the subsequent ancient editions. The present correction, which is certainly right, was made by Mr. Capell. In two of the other speeches spoken by the messenger, he uses the same language, nor is it likely that he should address Hotspur, without this mark of respect. In his first speech the messenger is interrupted by the impetuosity of the person whom he addresses, to whom, it may be supposed, he would otherwise have there also given his title.

MALONE.

WOR. I pr'ythee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?

MESS. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth;
And at the time of my departure thence,
He was much fear'd by his physicians.

WOR. I would, the state of time had first been whole
Ere he by sickness had been visited;
His health was never better worth than now.

HOT. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect

The very life-blood of our enterprize;
'Tis catching hither, even to our camp.——
He writes me here,—that inward sickness⁴——
And that his friends by deputation could not
So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet,
To lay so dangerous and dear a trust
On any soul remov'd,⁵ but on his own.
Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,——
That with our small conjunction, we should on,
To see how fortune is dispos'd to us:
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now;⁶

I have followed Mr. Malone in printing this first speech with a break after—father,——. At the same time I suspect that the word—com, which deprives the sentence of all pretensions to harmony, was a playhouse interpolation, and that the passage originally ran as follows:

These letters from your father——. STEEVENS.

⁴——that inward sickness——] A line, probably, has here been lost. MALONE.

I suspect no omission. Hotspur is abruptly enumerating the principal topics of the letter he has before him. STEEVENS.

⁵ On any soul remov'd,] On any life near to himself; on any whose interest is remote. JOHNSON.

So, in As you Like it: "Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so remote a dwelling." STEEVENS.

⁶——no quailing now;] To quail is to languish, to sink into dejection. So, in Cymbeline:

¹ For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits
"Quail to remember,——." STEEVENS.

Because the king is certainly possess'd
Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

WOR. Your father's sickness is a maim to us.

HOT. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp'd off: —
And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want
Seems more than we shall find it: — Were it good,
To set the exact wealth of all our states
All at one cast? to set so rich a main
On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?
It were not good: for therein should we read
The very bottom and the soul of hope;
The very list, the very utmost bound
Of all our fortunes.⁷

⁷ — for therein should we read

The very bottom and the soul of hope;

The very list, the very utmost bound

Of all our fortunes.] To read the bottom and the soul of hope, and the bound of fortune, though all the copies, and all the editors have received it, surely cannot be right. I can think of no other word than risque?

— therein should we risque

The very bottom &c.

The list is the silvage; figuratively, the utmost line of circumference, the utmost extent. If we should with less change read read, it will only suit with list, not with soul or bottom.

JOHNSON.

I believe the old reading to be the true one. So, in *King
Henry VI.* Part II:

" — we then should see the bottom.

" Of all our fortunes." STEEVENS.

I once wished to read — read, instead of read; but I now think, there is no need of alteration. To read a bound is certainly a very harsh phrase, but not more so than many others of Shakspeare. At the same time that the bottom of their fortunes should be displayed, its circumference or boundary would be necessarily exposed to view.
Sight being necessary to reading, to read is here used, in Shakspeare's licentious language, for to see.

The passage quoted by Mr. Steevens from K. Henry VI. strongly confirms this interpretation. To it may be added this in Romeo and Juliet:

DOUG. 'Faith,' and so we should ;
Where now remains ⁷ a sweet reversion :
We may boldly spend upon the hope of what
Is to come in : ⁸
A comfort of retirement ⁹ lives in this.

HOT. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,
If that the devil and mischance look big
Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

WOR. But yet, I would your father had been here.
The quality and hair of our attempt ²

" Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,
Which sin into the bottom of my grief?"

And this in Misfortunes for Misfortunes:

" — and it torments me

" To look into the bottom of my place."

One of the phrases in the text is found in Tenelfth Night: "She is the life of my voyage." The other [the feet of hope] occurs frequently in our author's plays, as well as in those of his contemporaries. Thus, in A Midsummer Night's Dream, we find — "the feet of counsel;" and in Titulus and Cuspidus — "the feet of love." So also, in Marlowe's Lucretia's Dominion:

" — Your desperate aim

" Hath almost thrust quite through the heart of hope."

MALONE.

⁷ Where now remains —] Where is, I think, used here for whereas. It is often used with that signification by our author and his contemporaries. MALONE.

So, in Pericles, Prince of Tyre, Act I. sc. i:

" Hence now you are both a father and a son."

STEVENS.

⁸ We may boldly spend upon the hope of what

Is to come in:] Read:

We now may boldly spend, upon the hope

Of what is to come in. KITSCH.

⁹ A comfort of retirement —] A support to which we may have recourse. JOHNSON.

² The quality and hair of our attempt — The hair seems to be the complexion, the character. The metaphor appears harsh to us, but, perhaps, was familiar in our author's time. We still say

Brooks no division: It will be thought
 By some, that know not why he is away,
 That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike
 Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence;
 And think, how such an apprehension
 May turn the tide of fearful faction,
 And breed a kind of question in our cause:
 For, well you know, we of the offering side³ something is against the hair, as against the grain, that is, against the natural tendency. JOHNSON.

In an old comedy called The Family of Love, I meet with an expression which very well supports Dr. Johnson's explanation:

" — They say I am of the right hair, and indeed they may stand to't. "

Again, in The Coxcomb, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

" — Since he will be

" An ass against the hair. " STEEVENS.

This word is used in the same sense in the old interlude of Tom Tyler and his Wife, 1598:

" But I bidded a colt of a contrary hair. " MALONE.

³ — we of the offering side —] All the later editions read offending, but all the older copies which I have seen, from the first quarto to the edition of Rowe, read — we of the off'ring side. Of this reading the sense is obscure, and therefore the change has been made; but since neither offering nor offending are words likely to be mistaken, I cannot but suspect that offering is right, especially as it is read in the copy of 1599, which is more correctly printed than any single edition, that I have yet seen, of a play written by Shakspeare.

The offering side may signify that party, which, acting in opposition to the law, strengthens itself only by offers; increases its numbers only by promises. The king can raise an army, and continue it by threats of punishment; but those, whom no man is under any obligation to obey, can gather forces only by offers of advantage; and it is truly remarked, that they, whose influence arises from offers, must keep danger out of sight.

The offering side may mean simply the opponent, in opposition to the defendant; and it is likewise true of him that offers war, or makes an invasion, that his cause ought to be kept clear from all objections. JOHNSON.

Johnson's last explanation of the word offering, appears to be right. His first is far-fetched and unnatural. M. MASON.

Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement ;
 And stop all sight- holes, every loop, from whence
 The eye of reason may pry in upon us :
 This absence of your father's draws a curtain,
 That shows the ignorant a kind of fear ⁴
 Before not dreamt of.

HOT. You strain too far.
 I, rather, of his absence make this use ; —
 It lends a lustre, and more great opinion,
 A larger dare to our great enterprise,
 Than if the earl were here: for men must think,
 If we, without his help, can make a head
 To push against the kingdom; with his help,
 We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down. —
 Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

DOUG. As heart can think: there is not such a word
 Spoke of in Scotland, as this term of fear. ⁵

Enter Sir RICHARD VERNON.

HOT. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.
 VER. Pray God, my news be worth a welcome,
 lord.

The earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
 Is marching hitherwards; with him, prince John.

HOT. No harm: What more?

⁴ *This absence of your father's draws a curtain,
 That shows the ignorant a kind of fear &c.] To draw a curtain had anciently the same meaning, as to undraw one has at present.
 So, [says Mr. Malone,] in a stage direction in King Henry VI. P. II.
 [quaint, 1600,] "Then the curtains being drawn, Duke Humphrey is discovered in his bed."*

Fear, in the present instance, signifies a terrific object.

STEVENS.

⁵ — term of fear.] Folio — dream of fear. MALONE.

VER. And further, I have learn'd, —
The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.

HOT. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,^a
And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside,
And bid it pass?

VER. All furnish'd, all in arms,
All plum'd like estridges, that wing the wind;
Bated like eagles having lately bath'd;

^a The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales. Shakspeare rarely bestows his epithets at random. Stowe says of the Prince: "He was passing swift in running, inasmuch that he with two other of his lords, without hounds, bow, or other cogise, would take a wild buck, or doe, to a large park." STREVENA.

⁷ All furnish'd, all in arms,

All plum'd like estridges, that wing the wind;

Bated like eagles &c. The old copies — that with the wind.

For the sake of affording the reader a text easily intelligible, I have followed the example of Mr. Malone, by adopting Dr. Johnson's emendation.

See the following notes. STREVENA.

What is the meaning of estridges, that bated with the wind like eagles? for the relative that, in the usual construction, must relate to estridges.

SIR T. HAMMER reads:

All plum'd like estridges, and with the wind

Bating like eagles.

By which he has escaped part of the difficulty, but has yet left impropriety sufficient to make his reading questionable.

I read:

All furnish'd, all in arms,

All plum'd like estridges that wing the wind

Bated like eagles.

This gives a strong image. They were not only plum'd like estridges, but their plumes fluttered like those of an estridge beating the wind with his wings. A more lively representation of young men ardent for enterprise, perhaps no writer has ever given.

JOHNSON.

Glittering in golden coats, like images;
As full of spirit as the month of May,

I believe esridges never mount at all, but only run before the wind, opening their wings to receive its assistance in urging them forward. They are generally hunted on horseback, and the art of the hunter is to turn them from the gale, by the help of which they are too fleet for the swiftest horse to keep up with them. I should have suspected a line to have been omitted, had not all the copies conformed in the same reading.

In the 22d Song of Dryden's Polixenus is the same thought:

"Prince Edward all in gold, as he great Jove had been;

"The Mountfords all in plumes, like esridges, were seen."

STEEVENS.

I have little doubt that instead of with, some verb ought to be substituted here. Perhaps it should be whisk. The word is used by a writer of Shakspeare's age. England's Helicon, sign. Q:

"Thus said, he whisk'd his particoloured wings." TYNWATER.

This is one of those passages, in which, in my apprehension, there can be no doubt that there is some corruption, either by the omission of an entire line, or by one word being printed instead of another. The first quarto, which is followed by all the other ancient copies, reads:

*All plum'd like esridges, that with the wind,*

Bated like eagles having lately bath'd.

From the context it appears to me evident that two distinct comparisons were here intended, that two objects were mentioned, to each of which the Prince's troops were compared; and that our author could never mean to compare esridges to eagles, a confusion which the word with forces us to. In each of the subsequent lines a distinct image is given. — Besides, as Dr. Johnson has remarked, "What is the meaning of esridges that bated with the wind like eagles? for the relative that in the usual construction must relate to esridges."

Mr. Tyrwhitt concurs with me in thinking the old text corrupt. I have therefore adopted the slight alteration proposed by Dr. Johnson — that wing the wind; which gives an easy sense. — The spirit and aid of the troops are marked by their being compared to eagles in the next line; but the esridges appear to be introduced here, as in the passage quoted above from Dryden, by Mr. Steevens, solely on account of the soldiers' plumes; and the manner in which those birds are said to move, sufficiently explains the meaning of the words — that wing the wind. If this emendation be not just, and with be the true reading, a line must have been lost, in which the particular movement of the esridge was described. The concurrence of the copies (mentioned by Mr. Steevens in a foregoing

And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;

note) militates but little in my mind against the probability of such an omission; for in general, I have observed, that whenever there is a corruption in one copy, it is continued in every subsequent one. Omission is one of the most frequent errors of the press, and we have undoubted proofs that some lines were omitted in the early editions of these plays. See Vol. VI. p. 7, n. 4. Vol. XII. p. 57, n. 4. and Romeo and Juliet, Act III. sc. iv. See also King Henry VI. Part. II. Act III. sc. iv. where the following line is omitted in the folio, 2823:

"Jove sometimes went disguis'd, and why not I?"

There is still another objection to the old reading, that I had nearly forgotten. Supposing the expression—"that with the wind bated like eagles"—was defensible, and that these estridges were intended to be compared to eagles, why should the comparison be in the past time? Would it not be more natural to say,—The troops were all plumed like estridges, that, like eagles, bate with the wind, &c.

On the whole, I think it most probable that a line in which the motion of estridge was described, was inadvertently passed over by the transcriber or compositor, when the earliest copy was printed; an error which has indisputably happened in other places in these plays. It is observable, that in this passage, as it stands in the old copy, there is no verb: nothing is predicated concerning the troops. In the lost line it was very probably said, that they were then advancing. Rather, however, than print the passage with astrisks as imperfect, I have, as the lesser evil, adopted Dr. Johnson's emendation. Mr. Stevens's notes perfectly explain the text as now regulated.

I have said that nothing is predicated of these plumed troops, and this is a very strong circumstance to show that a line was omitted, in which they probably were at once described as in motion, and compared (for the sake of their plumage) to ostridges. The omitted line might have been of this import:

*All sunshin'd, all in arms,
All plum'd like ostridge, that with the wind
Run on, in gallant trim they now advance:
Bated like eagle having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coat like images,
As full of spirits as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.* MALONE.

All plum'd like ostridge,] All dressed like the Prince himself, the strick-feather being the cognizance of the Prince of Wales. GREY,

Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry, — with his beaver on,³

Bated like eagles having lately bath'd;] To bate is, in the style of falconry, to bate the wing, from the French, battre, that is, to flutter in preparation for flight. JOHNSON.

The following passage from David and Bethsabe, 1599, will confirm Dr. Johnson's assertion:

"Where all delighte sat bating, wing'd with thoughts,

"Ready to nestle in her naked breast."

Again, in Greene's Card of Fancy, 1608. "— made her abeck at the prey, bate at the loie," &c.

Writers on falconry also often mention the batting of hawks and eagles, as highly necessary for their health and spirits. — All birds, after balking, (which almost all birds are fond of,) spread out their wings to catch the wind, and flutter violently with them in order to dry themselves. This, in the falconer's language, is called bating, and by Shakspeare, bating with the wind. — It may be observed that birds never appear so lively and full of spirits, as immediately after batting. STEEVENS.

This appears to be justly explained by Steevens. When birds have bathed, they cannot fly until their feathers be disentangled, by bating with the wind. M. MASON.

Bated, &c. I believe, here used for bating, the passive for the active participle; a licence which our author often takes. So, in Othello:

"If virtue no delighted beauty lack."

Again, in The Comedy of Errors:

"And careful house with time's disfem'd hand."

To bate, as appears from Minsheu's Dict. 1617, was originally applied to birds of prey, when they swoop upon their quarry. S'abbatre, s' abatre, Fr. Hence it signifies, as Dr. Johnson has explained it, to flutter, "a Gal. battre, [says Minsheu,] i. e. to beat, because she [the hawk] beate herself with noisive flustering."

MALONE.

* Glistening in golden coats like images;] This alludes to the manner of dressing up images in the Romish churches on holy-days; when they are bedecked in robes very richly laced and embroidered. So, in Spenser's Fairy Queen, Book I. c. iii:

"He was to meet a flout and flurdie thiefe

"Wont to robbe churches of their ornaments, &c.

"Tha holij saints of their rich vestments

"He did disrobe," &c. STEEVENS.

³ I saw young Harry, — with his beaver on.] We should read: show up. It is an impropriety to say on: for the beaver is only

His cuisses on his thighs,² gallantly arin'd, —
 Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
 And vaulted³ with such ease into his seat,
 As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,
 To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,⁴ the visiere of the helmet, which let down, covers the face. When the soldier was not upon action he wore it up, so that his face might be seen, [thence Vernon says he saw young Harry &c.] But when upon action, it was let down to cover and secure the face. Hence in the Second Part of K. Henry IV. it is said :

" Their armed slaves in charge, their beavers down."

WARRINGTON.

There is no need of all this note ; for beaver may be a helmet ; on the future, trying his armour, might wear his beaver down. JOHNSON. Dr. Warburton seems not to have observed, that Vernon only says, he saw " young Harry," not that he saw his fall. MALONE.

Beaver and visiers were two different parts of the helmet. The former part let down to enable the wearer to disait, the latter was raised up to enable him to see. LORR.

Shakspeare however confounded them ; for, in Hamlet, Horatio says, that he saw the old king's face, because " he wore his beaver up." Nor is our poet singular in the use of this word. This was the common signification of the word, for Bullokar in his English Expositor 1616, defines beaver thus : " In armour it signifies that part of the helmet which may be lifted up, to take breath the more freely." MALONE.

The poet is certainly not guilty of the confusion laid to his charge with respect to the passage in Hamlet ; for the beaver was as often made to lift up as to let down. DOUCE.

² His cuisses on his thighs,] Cuisse, French, Armour for the thighs. FORT.

The reason why his cuisses are so particularly mentioned, I conceive to be, that his horsemanship is here praised, and the cuisses are that part of armour which most hinders a horseman's activity. JOHNSON.

³ And vaulted —] The context requires vault, but a word of one syllable will not suit the metre. Perhaps our author wrote vault it, a mode of phraseology of which there are some examples in these plays. MALONE.

⁴ To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,] This idea occurs in Have with you to Saffron Walden, at Gabriel Harrey's Hall in up, &c. 1596 : — " her hottest fury may be resembled to the passing of a brave carter by a Pegasus." STEEVENS.

And witch the world⁵ with noble horfemanship.

HOT. No more, no more; worfe than the fun in March,

This praise doth nourifh agues. Let them come ;
They come like facrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-ey'd maid of fmoky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them :
The mailed Mars fhall on his altar fit,
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire,
To hear this rich reprisal is fo nigh,
And yet not ours : — Come, let me take my horfe,
Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt,
Againft the bofom of the prince of Wales :
Harry to Harry fhall, hot horfe to horfe,
Meet, and ne'er part, till one drop down a corfe.—
O, that Glendower were come !

VER. There is more news :

I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.

DOUG. That's the worft tidings that I hear of yet.

WOR. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frofly found.

HOT. What may the king's whole battle reach unto ?

VER. To thirty thoufand.

HOT. Forty let it be ;

My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may ferve fo great a day,
Come, let us take a mufter fpeedily :
Doomfday is near ; die all, die merrily.

DOUG. Talk not of dying ; I am out of fear
Of death, or death's hand, for this one half year.

[Exeunt.

⁵ And witch the world —] For bewitch, charm. FORD.
So, in King Henry VI. Part. II :

" To fit and witch me, as Alcaniza did." STEEVENS.

SCENE II.

A publick Road near Coventry.Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

FAL. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack: our soldiers shall march through; we'll to Sutton-Colfield to-night.

BARD. Will you give me money, captain?

FAL. Lay out, lay out.

BARD. This bottle makes an angel.

FAL. An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all. I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto⁶ meet me at the town's end.

BARD. I will, captain: farewell. [Exit.]

FAL. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a fouced gurnet.⁷ I have misused the king's press

⁶ ——— lieutenant Peto — } This passage proves that Peto did not go with the Prince. JOHNSON.

⁷ ——— fouced gurnet. } This is a dish mentioned in that very laughable poem called The Countess's Truffie, 1658:

"Sturk thick with cloves upon the back,

"Well Ruſt'd with ſage, and for the ſmark,

"Daintily ſtew'd with pepper black.

"Seur'd gurnet."

Seur'd gurnet is an appellation of contempt very frequently employed in the old comedies. So, in Darker's Huntſ Where, 1633:

"Punch! you ſaur'd gurnet!"

Again, in the Prologue to Wily Beguiled, 1606:

"Out you fouced gurnet, you wool-ſill!"

Among the Cotton MSS. is a part of an old household book for the year 1594. See Fesp. F. xvi:

"Supper. Paid for a gurnard, viii. d." STEEVENS.

A gurnet is a fiſh very nearly reſembling a pipet.

damnable. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I press me none but good householders,* yeomen's sons: inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been ask'd twice on the bans; such a commodity of warm slaves, as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver, worse than a struck fowl, or a hurt wild-duck.⁹ I

It should seem from one of Taylor's pieces, entitled A bawd, 12mo. 1635, that a fowrd gerest was sometimes used in the same metaphorical sense to which we now frequently use the word gadgon: "Though she [a bawd] live after the flesh, all is fish that comes to the net with her;—She hath bayter for all kinde of frye: a great lord is her Greenland whale; a countrey gentleman is her codr-head; a rich citizen's foo is her fow'd gerest, or her gadgon." MALONE.

— [I press me none but good householders, &c.] This practice is complained of in Baroble Riche's Souldier's Wight to Briton's welfare, or Captaine Skill and Captaine Prill, 1604, p. 62: "Sir, I perceive by the sound of your words you are a favourite to Captainer, and I thinke you could be contented, that to serve the expedition of these times, we should take up honest hoefstholders, men that are of wealth and' abilitie to live at home, such as your captaines might chop and change, and make marchandise of," &c.

STEVENS.

* — [worse than a struck fowl, or a hurt wild-duck.] The repetition of the same image disposed Sir Thomas Haumer, and after him Dr. Warburton, to read, in opposition to all the copies, a struck durr, which is indeed a proper expression, but not likely to have been corrupted. Shakspeare, perhaps, wrote a struck sorrel, which, being negligently read by a man not skilled in hunter's language, was easily changed to struck fowl. Sorrel is used in Love's Labour's Lost for a young durr; and the terms of the chase were, in our author's time, familiar to the ears of every gentleman. JOHNSON.

— [fowl.] Thus the first quarto, 1598. In a subsequent copy (1608) the word fowl being erroneously printed fool, that error was adopted in the quarto 1613, and consequently in the folio, which was printed from it. MALONE.

Fowl, seems to have been the word designed by the poet, who might have thought no opposition between fowl, i. e. domestick birds, and wild-fowl, sufficient on this occasion. He has almost the same expression in Much Ado about Nothing: "Alas poor hurt fowl now will he creep into fedges." STEVENS.

prefs'd me none but such toasts and butter,* with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores: and such as, indeed, were never soldiers; but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers,³ revolted rapsters, and ostlers trade-fallen; the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace:⁴ ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old faced ancient:⁵

* — Jack toasts and butter,] This term of contempt is used in Beaumont and Fletcher's Wit without Money:

"They love young toast and butter, Bow-bell suckers."

STEVENS.

"Loodiners, and all within the sound of Bow-bell, are in reproth called cockoies, and eaters of bathrid toasts," Morryson's Journ. 1617. MALONE.

³ — younger sons to younger brothers, &c.] Raleigh, in his Discourse on War, uses this very expression for men of desperate fortune and wild adventure. Which borrowed it from the othes, I know not, but I think the play was printed before the Discourse.

JOHNSON.

Perhaps Oliver Cromwell was indebted to this speech, for the sarcasm which he threw out on the soldiers commanded by Hampden: "Your troops are most of them old decay'd serving men and topsters." &c. STEVENS.

⁴ — cankers of a calm world, and a long peace;] So, in The Puritane: "— haub'd and nourish'd in the idle calmness of peace." Again, in Pierce Plainish in Supplication to the Devil, 1592: — all the canker-worms that breed on the rust of peace."

STEVENS.

⁵ — ten times more dishonourably ragged than an old faced ancient:] Shakspeare uses this word so promiscuously to signify an ensign or standard bearer, and also the colours or standard bearer, that I cannot be at a certainty for his allusion here. If the text be genuine, I think the meaning must be, as dishonourably ragged as one that has been an ensign all his days; that has let age creep and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services; that you would think, upon him, and never had merit enough to gain preferment. Dr. Warburton, who understands it in the second construction, has suspected the text, and given the following ingenious emendation: "How is an old-fac'd ancient or ensign, dishonourably ragged?" On the contrary, nothing is deemed more honourable than a ragged pair of colours. A very little alteration will restore it to its original sense, which contains a touch of the blondest and most fine-turn'd satire in the world: — in times more dishonourably ragged than an old fust ancient; i. e. the colours used by the city-companies in their leasls and processions; for each company had one with its peculiar device, which was usually displayed and borne about on such occasions. Now nothing could be more witty or farcical than this comparison: for as halloo'd ragamuffins were reduced to their tatter'd condition through their riotous excesses; so this old flag ancient became torn and tatter'd, not in any meanly exercise of arms, but amidst the revels of drunken bacchanals." THEOBALD.

Dr. Warburton's emendation is very acute and judicious; but I know not whether the licentiousness of our author's diction may not allow us to suppose that he meant to represent his soldiers, as more ragged, though less honourably ragged, than an old ancient.

JOHNSON.

An old fac'd ancient, is an old standard mended with a different colour. It should not be written in one word, as old and fac'd are distinct epithets. To face a gown is to trim it; an expression at present in use. In our author's time the facings of gowns were always of a colour different from the stuff itself. So, in this play:

"To face the garment of rebellion

"With some fine colour"

Again, in Ram Alley or Merry Tricks, 1611:

"Your sawny coats with greasy facings here." STEEVENS.

So, in The Prisoner, a comedy, 1607: "—full of toler, like a shot ancient." The modern editors, instead of a dishonourable read dishonourably; but the change is unnecessary, for our author frequently uses adjectives adverbally. So again in this play:

"And since this business to face is done"

Again, in K. Henry VIII: "He is equal ravenous as he is subtle." Again, in Hamlet: "I am myself indifferent honest." Again, in The Taming of the Shrew:

"Her only fault—

"Is that she is intolerable curst."

See also Vol. IX. p. 228, n. y. MALONE.

that I had a hundred and fifty tatter'd prodigals, lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draff and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me, I had unloaded all the gibbets, and press'd the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scare-crows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat: — Nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on; ⁶ for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half⁷ in all my company: and the half-shirt is two napkins, tack'd together, and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at saint Alban's, or the red-nose inn-keeper of Daintry.⁸ But that's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter Prince HENRY and WESTMORELAND.

P. HEN. How now, blown Jack? how now, quilt?

FAL. What, Hal? How now, mad wag? what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire? — My good lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy; I thought, your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

WEST. 'Faith, sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are ⁶ — gyves on;] i. e. shackles. POPE.

So, in the old Moralities of Hycke Scorne:

"And I will go fetch a pair of gyves."

Again:

"They be yeomen of the wretched, that be shackled in gyves."

STEVENS.

⁷ — There's but a shirt and a half — } The old copies read —
There's not a shirt &c. Corrected by Mr. Rowe, in The Merchant of Venice, printed by J. Roberts, 4to 1600, but has taken the place of note.

⁸ Repent but you that you shall lose your friend," MALONE.

⁸ — of Daintry.] i. e. Daventry. STEVENS.

there already: The king, I can tell you, looks for us all; we must away all night.⁷

FAL. Tut, never fear me; I am as vigilant, as a cat to steal cream.

P. HEN. I think, to steal cream indeed; for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack; Whose fellows are these that come after?

FAL. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. HEN. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

FAL. Tut, tut; good enough to tofs;⁸ food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit, as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

WEST. Ay, but, fir John, methinks, they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly.

FAL. 'Faith, for their poverty,—I know not where they had that: and for their bareness,—I am sure, they never learn'd that of me.

P. HEN. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs, bare. But, firrah, make haste; Percy is already in the field.

FAL. What, is the king encamp'd?

WEST. He is, fir John; I fear, we shall stay too long.

FAL. Well,
To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a feast,
Fits a dull fighter, and a keen guest. [Exit.

⁷ —we must away all night.] Read,—we must away all to-night. M. MASON.

Perhaps Westmoreland means—"we must travel all night."

⁸ —good enough to tofs;] That is, to tofs upon a pike.

STEVENS.

JOHNSON.

SCENE III.

The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, DOUGLAS, and VERNON,

HOT. We'll fight with him to-night.

WOR. It may not be.

DOUG. You give him then advantage.

VER. Not a whit.

HOT. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

VER. So do we.

HOT. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

WOR. Good counsil, be advis'd; stir not to-night.

VER. Do not, my lord.

DOUG. You do not counsil well;

You speak it out of fear, and cold heart.

VER. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life,
(And I dare well maintain it with my life,)

If well-respected honour bid me on,

I hold as little counsil with weak fear,

As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives:^s—

Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle,

Which of us fears.

DOUG. Yea, or to-night.

VER. Content.

HOT. To-night. say I.

VER. Come, come, it may not be,

^s As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives:] The old copies, — that this day lives: STEEVENS.We should omit the words, this day, which weaken the sense and destroy the measure. M. MASON.

I wonder much, being men of such great leading,*
 That you foresee not what impediments
 Drag back our expedition: Certain horse
 Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up:
 Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day;
 And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
 Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,
 That not a horse is half the half himself.³

HOT. So are the horses of the enemy
 In general, journey-bated, and brought low;
 The better part of ours are full of rest.

WOR. The number of the king exceedeth ours:
 For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The trumpets sound a parley.]

Enter Sir WALTER BLUNT.

BLUNT. I come with gracious offers from the king,
 If you vouchsafe me hearing, and respect.

HOT. Welcome, sir Walter Blunt; And 'would to God,

You were of our determination!
 Some of us love you well: and even those some Envy your great deservings, and good name;
 Because you are not of our quality,⁴
 But stand against us like an enemy.

* — such great leading.] Such conduct, such experience in martial business. JOHNSON.

The old copies,

— such great leading as you are.

By the advice of Mr. Risdon I have omitted the words — as you are, which only serve to destroy the metre. STEEVENS.

³ — half himself.] Old copies — half of himself. STEEVENS.

⁴ — of our quality.] Quality in our author's time was frequently used in the sense of fellowship or occupation. So, in The Tempest: "Talk Ariel and all his quality," i. e. all those who were employed with Ariel in similar services or occupations; his

BLUNT. And God defend, but still I should stand so;
 So long as, out of limit, and true rule,
 You stand against anointed majesty!
 But, to my charge.—The king hath sent to know
 The nature of your griefs;⁵ and whereupon
 You conjure from the breast of civil peace
 Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land
 Audacious cruelty: If that the king
 Have any way your good deserts forgot,—
 Which he confesseth to be manifold,—
 He bids you name your griefs; and, with all speed,
 You shall have your desires, with interest;
 And pardon absolute for yourself, and these,
 Herein mist by your suggestion.

HOT. The king is kind; and, well we know, the king
 Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.
 My father, and my uncle, and myself,
 Did give him that same royalty he wears:⁶

fellows. Again, in Hamlet: "—give me a taste of your quality." MALONE.

⁵ ——— of your griefs; } That is, grievances. So, in A Declaration of the Treasons of the late Earle of Essex, &c. 1601: "The Lord Keeper requir'd the Earle of Essex, that if he would not declare his griefs openly, yet that then he would impart them privately." MALONE.

⁶ My father, and my uncle, and myself.

Did give him that same royalty he wears: } The Percies were in the highest favour with King Henry the Fourth for some time after his accession. Thomas Earl of Worcester was appointed Governor to the Prince of Wales, and was honoured with the custody of Isabel, widow of King Richard the Second, when she was sent back to France after that king's deposition. Hotspur, who accompanied him on that occasion, in the presence of the Ambassadors of both nations, who met between Calais and Boulogne, protested "upon his soul" that she was a virgin, "found and entire even as she was delivered to King Richard, and if any would say to the contrary, he was ready to prove it against him by combat." Spect. p. 155. MALONE.

B b 2

And,—when he was not six and twenty strong,
 Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
 A poor unaided outlaw sneaking home,—
 My father gave him welcome to the shore:
 And,—when he heard him swear, and vow to God,
 He came but to be duke of Lancaster,
 To sue his livery,⁶ and beg his peace;
 With tears of innocency, and terms of zeal,—
 My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,
 Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too.
 Now, when the lords and barons of the realm
 Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,
 The more and less⁷ came in with cap and knee;

² To sue his livery.] This is a law phrase belonging to the feudal tenures; meaning, to sue out the delivery or possession of his lands from those persons who on the death of any of the tenants of the crown, seized their lands, till the heir paid out his livery.

STEEVENS.

Before the 3rd year of King Henry the Eighth, wardships were usually granted as court favour, to those who made suit for, and had interest enough to obtain them. RITSON.

During the existence of the feudal tenures, on the death of any of the King's tenants, an inquest of office, called inquisition post mortem, was held, to inquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, of what age he was, &c. and in those cases where the heir was a minor, he became the ward of the crown; the land was seized by its officers, and continued in its possession, or that of the person to whom the crown granted it, till the heir came of age, and sued out his livery, or replemain, that is, the delivery of the land out of his guardian's hands. To regulate these inquiries, which were greatly abused, many persons being compelled to sue out livery from the crown, who were by no means tenants thereunto, the Court of Wards and Liveries was erected by Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46. See Blackstone's Comm. II. 61. III. 258.

MALONE.

⁷ The more and less—] i. e. the greater and the less.

STEEVENS.

Steevens has given the words, the more and less, the only explanation they can bear; but I have little doubt that we ought to read—

They, more and less, came in &c. M. MASON.

Met him in boroughs, cities, villages;
 Attended him on bridges, flood in lanes,
 Laid gilds before him, proffer'd him their oaths,
 Gave him their heirs; as pages follow'd him.⁸
 Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.
 He presently,—as greatness knows itself,—
 Steps me a little higher than his vow
 Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
 Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurg;⁹
 And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
 Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees,
 That lie too heavy on the commonwealth:
 Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
 Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,
 'Tis seeming brow of justice, did he win
 The hearts of all that he did angle for,
 Proceeded further; cut me off the heads
 Of all the favourites, that the absent king
 In deputation left behind him here,
 When he was personal in the Irish war.

BLUNT. Tut, I came not to hear this.

HOT. Then, to the point.—

In short time after, he depos'd the king;
 Soon after that, depriv'd him of his life;
 And, in the neck of that,¹⁰ task'd the whole state:⁵

⁸ Gave him their heirs; as pages follow'd him,] Perhaps we ought to point differently:

Gave him their heirs as pages follow'd him, &c. MALONE.

⁹ Upon the naked shore &c.] In this whole speech he alludes again to some passages in Richard the Second. JOHNSON.

¹⁰ And, in the neck of that,] So, in Painter's Palace of Pleasure, 1566: "Great mischiefses succedyng one in another's necke."

HENDERSON.

⁵ —task'd the whole state:] I suppose it should be tax'd the whole state. JOHNSON.

Task'd is here used for taxed; it was once common to employ these words indiscriminately. Memoirs of P. de Commynes, by

To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman March
 (Who is, if every owner were well plac'd, Indeed his king,) to be incag'd in 'Wales,³
 There without ransom to lie forfeited:
 Disgrac'd me in my happy victories;
 Sought to entrap me by intelligence;
 Rated my uncle from the council-board;
 In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;
 Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong:
 And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out
 This head of safety;⁴ and, withal, to pry
 Into his title, the which we find Too indirect for long continuance.

BLUNT. Shall I return this answer to the king?

HOT. Not so, sir Walter; we'll withdraw a while.
 Go to the king; and let there be impawn'd
 Some surety for a safe return again,
 And in the morning early shall mine uncle
 Bring him our purposes: and so farewell.

BLUNT. I would, you would accept of grace and love.

HOT. And, may be, so we shall.

BLUNT. Pray heaven, you do!
 [Exeunt.]

Danest, folio, 4th edit. 1674, p. 136: "Duke Philip, by the space of many years levied neither subsidies nor tasks." Again, in Stephen Gosson's School of Abuse, 1579: "—like a greedy surveour being sent into Fraunce to govern the countie, robbed them and spoyled them of all their treasure with unreasonable tasks."

Again, in Holinshed, p. 422: "There was a new and strange subbidie or task granted to be levied for the king's use." STEEVENS.

³ —incag'd in Wales,] The old copies have engag'd. Corrected by Mr. Theobald, MALONE.

No change was necessary. Engag'd signifies delivered as a hostage;
 and is again used in that sense. See p. 386, n. 9. DOUGL.

⁴ This head of safety:] This army, from which I hope for protection. JOHNSON.

Painted by John Everett given a dramatic and the whole part of the scene

When I ponder on my days! but for my days
 The most important with my youth, SHAKESPEARE. The scene of it is for there is great action.
 I had first seen of the day and days which, Sword Point of And so that were the scene somewhat
 Love was with grief had gone and I had heard King Henry the Fifth, Long given it years!
 ACT IV SCENE IV.
The Palace at Westminster. King Henry is the Prince of Wales

SCENE IV.

York. A Room in the Archbishop's House.

Enter the Archbishop of York, and a Gentleman.

ARCH. Hie, good fir Michael; bear this sealed brief,⁵

With winged haste, to the lord marshal;⁶
This to my cousin Scroop; and all the rest
To whom they are directed: if you knew
How much they do import, you would make haste.

GENT. My good lord,
I guess their tenor.

ARCH. Like enough, you do.⁷
To-morrow, good fir Michael, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must 'bide he touch: For, fir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The king, with mighty and quick-raised power,
Meets with ourd Harry: and I fear, fir Michael,—
What with the sickness of Northumberland,
(Whose power was in the first proportion,)⁸
And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,

⁵ ——— sealed brief,] A brief is simply a letter. JOHNSON.

⁶ ——— to the lord marshal;] Thomas Lord Mowbray.
MALONE,

⁷ Gent. My good lord,
I guess their tenor.

Arch. Like enough, you do.] Read:

Gent. My lord, I guess their tenor.

Arch. Like enough. RITSON.

⁸ ——— is the first proportion,] Whose quota was larger than that of any other man in the confederacy. JOHNSON.

(Who with them was a rated finew too,⁷
 And comes not in, o'er-rul'd by prophecies,)—
 I fear, the power of Percy is too weak
 To wage an instant trial with the king.

GENT. Why, my good lord, you need not fear;
 there's Douglas,
 And Mortimer.⁸

ARCH. No, Mortimer's not there,

GENT. But there is Mordake, Vernon, lord Harry
 Percy,

And there's my lord of Worcester; and a lead
 Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

ARCH. And so there is: but yet the ling hath drawn

The special head of all the land together —
 The prince of Wales, lord John of Lancaster,
 The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt;
 And many more corrivals, and dear men
 Of estimation and command in arms.

GENT. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well oppos'd.

ARCH. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear;
 And, to prevent the worst, sir Michael, speed:
 For, if lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
 Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,—
 For he hath heard of our confederacy,—
 And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him;
 Therefore, make haste: I must go write again
 To other friends; and so farewell, sir Michael.

[Exeunt severally.]

⁷ — rated finew too.] A rated finew signifies a strength on which we reckoned; a help of which we made account. JOHNSON.

⁸ And Mortimer.] Old copies, redundantly,
And lord Mortimer. STEEVENS.

ACT V.³ SCENE I.The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter King HENRY, Prince HENRY, Prince JOHN of Lancaster, Sir WALTER BLUNT, and Sir JOHN FALSTAFF. *

K. HEN. How bloodily the sun begins to peer Above yon busky hill! ² the day looks pale
At his distemperature.

P. HEN. The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes; ⁴
And, by his hollow whistling in the leaves,
Foretells a tempest, and a blustering day.

K. HEN. Then with the losers let it sympathize;
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. —

Trumpet. Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

How now, my lord of Worcester? 'tis not well,

² AB V.] It seems proper to be remarked, that in the editions printed while the author lived, this play is not broken into Acts. The division which was made by the players in the first folio, seems commodious enough; but, being without authority, may be changed by any editor who thinks himself able to make a better.

JOHNSON.

* In the old and modern editions the Earl of Westmoreland is made to enter here with the King; but, it appears from a passage in the next scene that he was left as a hostage in Hotspur's camp, till Worcester should return from treating with Henry. See p. 385, n. 6. MALONE.

³ — busky hill!] Busky is woody. (Besford, Fl.) Milton writes the word perhaps more properly, bostry. STEEVENS.

⁴ — to his purposes] That is, to the sun's, to that which the sun portends by his unusual appearance. JOHNSON.

That you and I should meet upon such terms
 As now we meet: You have deceiv'd our trust;
 And made us doff our easy robes³ of peace,
 To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel:⁴
 This is not well, my lord, this is not well.
 What say you to't? will you again unknit
 This churchish knot of all-abhorred war?
 And move in that obedient orb again,
 Where you did give a fair and natural light;
 And be no more an exhal'd meteor,
 A prodigy of fear, and a portent
 Of broached mischief to the unborn times?

WOR. Hear me, my liege:
 For mine own part, I could be well content
 To entertain the lag-end of my life
 With quiet hours; for, I do protest,
 I have not fought the day of this dislike.

K. HEN. You have not fought it! how comes it
 then?

FAL. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

P. HEN. Peace, chewet, peace.⁵

³ — doff our easy robes —] i. e. do them off, put them off.
 So, in King John:

"Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame —."

STEVENS.

⁴ To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel:] Shakespeare must have been aware that the King was not at this time more than four years older than he was at the deposition of King Richard. And indeed in the next play, he makes him expressly tell us, that it was then

" — but eight years since

" Northumberland, even to the eyes of Richard

" Gave him defiance."

But it is altogether fruitless to attempt the reconciliation of our author's chronology. RITSON.

⁵ Peace, chewet, peace.] A chewet, or churt, is a noisy chattering bird, a pie. This is a proper reproach to Falstaff for his ill-timed and impudent jest. THEOBALD.

Wor. It pleas'd your majesty, to turn your looks
 Of favour, from myself, and all our house;
 And yet I must remember you, my lord,
 We were the first and dearest of your friends.
 For you, my staff of office⁶ did I break
 In Richard's time; and posted day and night
 To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
 When yet you were in place and in account
 Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
 It was myself, my brother, and his son,
 That brought you home, and boldly did outdare
 The dangers of the time: You swore to us, —
 And you did swear that oath at Doncaster, —
 That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state;
 Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n right,
 The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster;
 T'ò this we swore our aid. But, in short space,
 It rain'd down fortune showering on your head;
 And such a flood of greatness fell on you, —

In an old book of cookery, printed in 1596, I find a receipt to make chevrets, which, from their ingredients, seem to have been fat greasy puddings: and to these it is highly probable that the Prince alludes. Both the quartos and folio spell the word as it now stands in the text, and as I found it in the book already mentioned. So, in Bacon's Natural History: "As for chevets, which are likewise minced meet, instead of butter and fat, it were good to moisten them partly with cream, or almond and pistachio milk," &c. It appears from a receipt in The Forme of Cury, a Roll of ancient English Cookery, compiled about A. D. 1390, by the Master Cook of King Richard II. and published by Mr. Pegge, 8vo. 1780, that these chevrets were fried in oil. See p. 83, of that work. Cotgrave's Dictionnary explains the French word goubetet, to be a kind of round pie resembling our cheet. STEEVENS.

See also Florio's Italian Dictionary, 1598: "Fillingott. A kinde of daintie chevet or minced pie." MALONE.

⁶ —, my staff of office — See Richard the Second.

JOHNSON.

What with our help; what with the absent king;
 What with the injuries of a wanton time;¹
 The seeming sufferances that you had borne;
 And the contrarious winds, that held the king
 So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
 That all in England did repute him dead, —
 And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
 You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
 To gripe the general sway into your hand:
 Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
 And, being fed by us, you us'd us so
 As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird,²
 Useth the sparrow: did oppress our nest;
 Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk,
 That even our love durst not come near your sight,
 For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
 We were enforc'd, for safety sake, to fly
 Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
 Whereby we stand opposed³ by such means
 As you yourself have forg'd against yourself;
 By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
 And violation of all faith and troth
 Sworn to us in your younger enterprize.

K. HEN These things, indeed, you have articulated,⁴

¹ — the injuries of a wanton time; i. e. the injuries done by King Richard in the wantonness of prosperity. MURGRAVE.

² As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird. The cuckoo's chicken, who, being hatched and fed by the sparrow, in whose nest the cuckoo's egg was laid, grows in time able to devour her nurse.

JOHNSON.

³ — we stand opposed &c.] We stand in opposition to you.

JOHNSON.

⁴ — articulated. i. e. exhibited in articles. So, in Daniel's Civil Wars, &c. Book V:

"How to articulate with yielding wights."

Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches ;
 To face the garment of rebellion
 With some fine colour,³ that may please the eye
 Of fickle changelings, and poor discontents,⁴
 Which gape, and rub the elbow, at the news
 Of hurlyburly innovation :
 And never yet did insurrection want
 Such water-colours, to impaint his cause ;
 Nor moody beggars, starving for a time⁵
 Of pell-mell havoc and confusion.

P. HEN. In both our armies, there is many a soul
 Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
 If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
 The prince of Wales doth join with all the world
 In praise of Henry Percy: By my hopes, —
 This present enterprize set off his head,⁶ —

Again, in The Spanish Tragedy:

" To end those things articulated here. "

Again, in The Valiant Welchman, 1615 :

" Drum, beat loud! — I'll not articulate. "

STEEVENS.

³ To face the garment of rebellion

With some fine colour,] This is an allusion to our sordid festal habits, which were usually faced or turned up with a colour different from that of which they were made. So, in the old Istakud of Nature, bl. l. no date:

" His hosen shall be freshly garded

" Wyth colours two or thre. " STEEVENS.

⁴ — poor discontents,] Poor discontents are poor discontented people, as we now say — malcontents. So, in Machon's Malcontent, 1604 :

" What, play I well the free-breath'd discontent? "

MALONE.

⁵ — starving for a time —] i. e. impatiently expecting a time, &c. So, in The Comedy of Errors:

" And now again clean starved for a look. " MALONE.

⁶ — set off his head,] i. e. taken from his account.

MUSGRAVE.

I do not think, a braver gentleman,
 More active-valiant, or more valiant-young,⁷
 More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
 To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
 For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
 I have a mutant been to chivalry;
 And so, I hear, he doth account me too:
 Yet this before my father's majesty,——
 I am content, that he shall take the odds
 Of his great name and estimation;
 And will, to save the blood on either side,
 Try fortune with him in a single fight.

K. HEN. And, prince of Wales, so dare we venture thee;

Albeit, considerations infinite
 Do make against it:—No, good Worcester, no,
 We love our people well;⁸ even those we love,
 That are mist on your cousin's part:
 And, will they take the offer of our grace,
 Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
 Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his:
 So tell your cousin, and bring me word
 What he will do:—But if he will not yield,

⁷ More active-valiant, or more valiant-young. [Sir Thomas Hanmer reads—more valued young. I think the present gingle has more of Shakspeare. JOHNSON.

The same kind of gingle is in Sidney's Astrophil and Stella:

"—— young-wife, wife valiant." STEVENS.

⁸ — No, good Worcester, no,

We love our people well;] As there appears to be no reason for introducing the negative into this sentence, I should suppose it an error of the press, and that we ought to read,

—— know, good Worcester, know, &c.

There is sufficient reason to believe that many parts of these plays were dictated to the transcribers, and the words, know and no, are precisely the same in sound. M. MASON.

Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. So, be gone;
We will not now be troubled with reply;
We offer fair, take it advisedly.

[Exeunt WORCESTER and VERNON.]

P. HEN. It will not be accepted, on my life:
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms.

K. HEN. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge;

For, on their answer, we will set on them:
And God befriend us, as our cause is just!

[Exeunt King, BLUNT, and Prince JOHN.]

FAL. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle, and bestride me,² so; 'tis a point of friendship.

P. HEN. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.

FAL. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.

P. HEN. Why, thou owest God, a death.

[*Exit.*³]

FAL. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loth to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter; Honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour prick me off when I come on? how then? Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour

² — and bestride me,] In the battle of Agincourt, Henry, when king, did this act of friendship for his brother the Duke of Gloucester. STEVENS.

So, again, in The Comedy of Errors:

"When I bestride thee in the wars, and took

"Deep fears, to save thy life." MALONE.

³ Exit.] This exit is remarked by Mr. Upton. JOHNSON.

bath no skill in surgery then? No. What is honour? A word. What is in that word, honour? What is that honour? Air. A trim reckoning! — Who hath it? He that died o' Wednesday. Doth he feel it? No. Doth he hear it? No. Is it insensible then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it: — therefore I'll none of it: Honour is a mere scutcheon,³ and so ends my catechism. [Exit.]

S C E N E II.

The Rebel Camp.

Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

WOR. O, no, my nephew must not know, fir Richard,

The liberal kind offer of the king.

VER. 'Twere best, he did.

WOR. Then are we all undone.
It is not possible, it cannot be,
The king should keep his word in loving us;
He will suspect us still, and find a time
To punish this offence in other faults:
Suspicion shall be all stuck full of eyes:⁴
For treason is but trusted like the fox;

³ ——— Honour is a mere scutcheon,] This is very fine. The reward of brave actions formerly was only some honourable bearing in the shields of arms bestowed upon deliverers. But Falstaff having said that honour often came not till after death, he calls it very wittily a scutcheon, which is the painted heraldry borne in funeral processions: and by mere scutcheon is insinuated, that whether alive or dead, honour was but a name. WAREBURY.

⁴ Suspicion shall be all stuck full of eyes] The same image of suspicion is exhibited in a Latin tragedy, called Roxana, written about the same time by Dr. William Alabaster. JOHNSON.

Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd up,
 Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
 Look how we can, or sad, or merrily,
 Interpretation will misquote our looks;
 And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
 The better cherish'd, still the nearer death.
 My nephew's trespasss may be well forgot,
 It hath the excuse of youth, and heat of blood;
 And an adopted name of privilege, —
 A hare-brain'd Hotspur,⁵ govern'd by a spleen:
 All his offences live upon my head,
 And on his father's;—we did train him on;
 And, his corruption being ta'en from us,
 We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
 Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know,
 In any case, the offer of the king.

VER. Deliver what you will, I'll say, 'tis so.
 Here comes your cousin.

Enter HOTSPUR and DOUGLAS; and Officers; and Soldiers, behind.

HOT. My uncle is return'd:—Deliver up
 My lord of Westmoreland.⁶—Uncle, what news?

Dr. Farmer, with great propriety, would reform the line as I have printed it. In all former editions, without regard to measure, it stood thus:

Suspicion, all eyes lions, shall be flock full of eyes.

All the old copies read—supposition. STEEVENS.

The emendation was made by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

⁵ —an adopted name of privilege,—

A hare-brain'd Hotspur,] The name of Hotspur will privilege him from censure. JOHNSON.

⁶ —Deliver up

My lord of Westmoreland.] He was "impawd as a surety for the safe return" of Worcester. See Ad IV. sc. iii.

MALONE.

WOR. The king will bid you battle presently.

DOUG. Defy him by the lord of Westmoreland.⁷

HOT. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.⁸

DOUG. Marry, and shall, and very willingly.

[Exit.]

WOR. There is no seeming mercy? in the king.

HOT. Did you beg any? God forbid!

WOR. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of oath-breaking; which he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworn;
He calls us, rebels, traitors; and will scourge
With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter DOUGLAS.

DOUG. Arm, gentlemen; to arms! for I have thrown

A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engag'd,⁹ did bear it;
Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

WOR. The Prince of Wales stepp'd forth before the king.

And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

HOT. O, would the quarrel lay upon our heads;
And that no man might draw short breath to-day,

⁷ Doug. Defy him by the lord of Westmoreland, } This line, as well as the next, {as has been observed by one of the modern editors,} properly belongs to Hotspur, whose impatience would scarcely suffer any one to anticipate him on such an occasion.

MALONE.

⁸ Lord Douglas, go you &c. } Douglas is here used as a trisyllable.

MALONE.

⁹ And Westmoreland, that was engag'd, } Engag'd is delivered as an hollow. A few lines before, upon the return of Worcester, he orders Westmoreland to be disarmed. JOHNSON.

But I, and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me,
How show'd his talking? ² seem'd it in contempt?

VER. No, by my soul; I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms.
He gave you all the duties of a man;
'Trim'd up your praises with a princely tongue;
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle;
Making you ever better than his praise,
By still dispraising praise, valued with you: ³
And, which became him like a prince indeed,
He made a blushing cital of himself; ⁴

² How show'd his talking?] Thus the quarto, 1598. The others, with the folio, read—talking. STEEVENS.

I know not whether talking is not here used for taxing; i. e. his satirical representation. So, in As you like it:

“— my taxing, like a wild goose, lies.”

See p. 373, n. 3. Talking, however, is sufficiently intelligible in its more usual acceptation. We yet say, “he took him to task.”

MALONE.

³ By still dispraising praise, valued with you:] This foolish line is indeed in the folio 1623, but it is evidently the player's nonsense. WARBURTON.

This line is not only in the first folio, but in all the editions before it, that I have seen. Why it should be censured as nonsense I know not. To vitify praise, compared or valued with merit superior to praise, is no harsh expression. There is another objection to be made. Prince Henry, in his challenge of Percy, had indeed commended him, but with no such hyperboles as might represent him above praise; and there seems to be no reason why Vernon should magnify the prince's candour beyond the truth. Did then Shakspeare forget the foregoing scene? or are some lines lost from the Prince's speech? JOHNSON.

I do not suspect any omission. Our author in repeating letters and speeches of former scenes in his plays, seldom attends minutely to what he had written. I believe, in these cases he always trusted to memory. MALONE.

⁴ He made a blushing cital of himself:] Mr. Pope observes, that by cital is meant taxation; but I rather think it means recital.

And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd^d there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning, instantly.
There did he pause: But let me tell the world, —
If he outlive the envy of this day,
England did never owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness.

HOT. Confine, I think, thou art enamoured
Upon his follies; never did I hear^e
Of any prince, so wild, at liberty: ' —
But, be he as he will, yet once ere night

The verb is used in that sense in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act IV. sc. i:

" — for we cite our faults,

" That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives."

Aglio, in K. Henry V. Act V. sc. ii:

" Whose want gives growth to the imperfections

" Which you have cited," &c. COLLINS.

^g — he master'd —] i. e. was master of. STEEVENS.

^h Upon his follies; never did I hear —] The old copies — on his follies. Mr. Pope introduced the syllable necessary to metre. Mr. Malone, however, tells us, that — hear is used, in this instance, as a disyllable, and consequently, I suppose, would read the line as follows:

On his | follies ; | never | did I | hear. STEEVENS.

ⁱ Of any prince, so wild, at liberty:] Of any prince that played such pranks, and was not confined as a madman. JOHNSON.

The quartos 1598, 1599, and 1608, read — so wild a libertine. Perhaps the author wrote — so wild a libertine. Thus, in Antony and Cleopatra:

" Tie up the libertine in a field of straws."

The oldest reading, however, may be the true one; for in The Comedy of Errors the same phraseology occurs again:

" — plucking mountebanks,

" And many such like libertines of sin." STEEVENS.

Our author uses the expression in the text again, in King Richard III.

" My hair doth stand on end to hear her raucous.

" And so doth mine. I muse, why she's at liberty."

MALONE.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
 And by that musick let us all embrace:
 For, heaven to earth,² some of us never shall
 A second time do such a courtesy.

[The trumpets sound. They embrace, and exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Plain near Shrewsbury.

*Excursions, and Parties fighting. Alarum to the battle.
 Then enter DOUGLAS and BLUNT, meeting.*

BLUNT. What is thy name, that in the battle thus Thou crossest me? what honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

DOUG. Know then, my name is Douglas;
 And I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
 Because some tell me that thou art a king.

BLUNT. They tell thee true.

DOUG. The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought
 Thy likeness; for, instead of thee, king Harry,
 This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee,
 Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Northumberland, and has been long used by his predecessors. Sometimes it was expressed Esperance ma Comforte, which is still legible at Alnwick castle over the great gate. PERCY.

Our author found this word of battle in Holinshed. He seems to have used Esperance as a word of four syllables. So, in The Merry Wives of Windsor

"And Honi soit qui mal y pense, write." MALONE.

² For, heaven to earth,] i. e. one might wager heaven to earth.
 WARBURTON.

BLUNT. I was not born a yielder, thou proud
Scot;³

And thou shalt find a king that will revenge
Lord Stafford's death.

[They fight, and BLUNT is slain.]

Enter HOTSPUR.

HOT. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,

I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.

DOUG. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies the king.

HOT. Where?

DOUG. Here.

HOT. This, Douglas? no, I know this face full well:

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Sembly furnish'd⁴ like the king himself.

³ I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot;] The folio reads,
I think, better:

I was not born to yield, thou haughty Scot." RAYSON.

⁴ Sembly furnish'd &c.] i. e. in resemblance, alike. This word occurs in The Devil's Charter, 1607:

"So, sembly doth he with terror strike."

Again, in The Case is Alter'd, by Ben Jonson, 1609:

"Sembly prisoner to your general."

The same circumstance is also recorded in the 22d Song of Dryden's Belshazzar:

"The next, Sir Walter Blunt, he with three others slew,

"All armed like the king, which he dead sure accounted;

"But after, when he saw the king himself remounted,

"This head of mine, quoth he, four kings this day have slain,

"And swore out of the earth he thought they sprang again." STEEVENS.

DOUG. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!³
A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear.

Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

HOT. The king hath many marching in his coats.

DOUG. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;

I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece,
Until I meet the king.

HOT. Up, and away;

Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exeunt.]

Other Alarums. Enter FALSTAFF.

FAL. Though I could 'scape shot-free 'at London,⁴ I fear the shot here; here's no scoring, but

³ A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes? The old copies read: Ah, fool, go with thy soul, &c. but this appears to be nonsense. I have ventured to omit a single letter, as well as to change the punctuation, on the authority of the following passage in The Merchant of Venice:

"With one fool's head I came to woo,

"But I go away with two."

Again, more appositely in Promos and Gossamere, 1578:

"Go, and a knave with thee."

See a note on Timon of Athens, Act V. sc. ii. STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens has but partially eradicated the nonsense of this passage. Read:

A fool go with thy soul, where'er it goes. RITSON.

Whither, I believe, means—to whatever place. So, p. 155: 1

"—But hark you, Kate;

"Whither I go thither shall you go too." STEEVENS.

⁴ — Shot-free at London. [A play upon shot, as it means the part of a reckoning, and a missile weapon discharged from artillery. JOHNSON.

So, in Arifippus, or the Jovial Philosopher, 1630: "—the best shot to be discharged is the tavern bill; the best alarum is the sound of healths." Again, in The Play of the Four P's, 1569:

"Then after your drinking, how fall ye to winnking?"

"Sir, after drinking, while the shot is tinkling."

upon the pate, — Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt! — there's honour for you: Here's no vanity!⁵ — I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels. — I have led my ragga-muffins where they are pepper'd: there's but three of my hundred and fifty⁶ left alive; and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here?

Again, Heywood, in his Epigrams on Proverbs:

"And it is yll commynge, I have heard say,

"To the end of a jest, and beginnyng of a fray."

STEEVENS.

⁵ — Here's no vanity!] In our author's time the negative, in common speech, was used to design, ironically, the excess of a thing. Thus, Ben Jonson, in Every Man in his Humour, says:

"O here's no foppery!

"Drink, I can endure the flack better."

Meaning, at the passage shews, that the foppery was excessive. And so in many other places. WARBURTON.

I am in doubt whether this interpretation, though ingenious and well supported, is true. The words may mean, here is real honour, no vanity, or empty appearance. JOHNSON.

I believe Dr. Warburton is right: the same ironical kind of expression occurs in The Mad Lover of Beaumont and Fletcher:

"————— Here's no villainy!

"I am glad I came to the hearing."

Again, to Ben Jonson's Tale of a Tub:

"Here was no subtle device to get a weech!"

Again, in the first part of Jeronimo, &c. 1605:

"Here's no fur villainy! no damned brother!"

Again, in our author's Taming of the Shrew: "Here's no knavery!" STEEVENS.

⁶ — There's but three, of my hundred and fifty —] All the old copies have — There's not three, &c. Three are evidently erroneous. The same mistake has already happened in this play, where it has been slightly corrected. See p. 367, n. 7. So again, in Coriolanus, 1623:

"Cor. Ay, but mine own desire?

"I Cit. How, not your own desire?" MALONE.

Enter Prince HENRY.

P. HEN. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy sword:

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff
Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies,
Whose deaths are unreveng'd: Pr'ythee, lend thy sword.⁷

FAL. O Hal, I pr'ythee, give me leave to breathe a while. — Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms,⁸ as I have done this day. I have paid Percy; I have made him sure.

P. HEN. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee.⁹ I pr'ythee, lend me thy sword.

FAL. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou get'st not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

⁷ — Pr'ythee, lend thy sword.] Old copies, redundantly, Pr'ythee, lend me thy sword. STEVENS.

⁸ — Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms.] Meaning Gregory the Seventh, called Hildebrand. This furious friar surmounted almost invincible obstacles to deprive the Emperor of his right of investiture of bishops, which his predecessors had long attempted in vain. Fox, in his history, hath made Gregory so odious, that I don't doubt but the good Protestants of that time were well pleased to hear him thus characterized, as uniting the attributes of their two great enemies, the Turk and Pope, in one. WARBURTON.

⁹ — I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

P. Hen. He is, indeed; and he.] The Prince's answer, which is apparently connected with Falstaff's last words, does not cohere so well as if the knight had said —

I have made him sure: Percy's fast enough.

Perhaps a word or two like these may be lost. JOHNSON.

Sure his two significations; certainly disposed of, and safe. Falstaff uses it in the former sense, the Prince replies to it in the latter.

STEVENS.

P. HEN. Give it me: What, is it in the case?

FAL. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will sack a city.²

[The Prince draws out a bottle of sack.]³

P. HEN. What, is't a time to jest and dally now?

[Throws it at him, and exit.]

FAL. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him.⁴ If he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if I come ² — sack a city.] A quibble on the word sack.

JOHNSON.

The same quibble may be found in Aristippus, or the Jovial Philosopher, 1630: "— it may justly seem to have taken the name of sack from the sacking of cities." STEVENS.

³ — a bottle of sack.] The same comic circumstance occurs in the ancient Interlude of Nature, (written long before the time of Shakspeare,) bl. 1. no date:

"Gleesay. We shall have a warfare it ys told me.

"Man. Ye; where is thy harness?

"Gleesay. Mary, here may ye se.

"Here ys harness inow.

"Wrath. Why hast thou none other harness but thys?

"Gleesay. What the devyll harness should I myn,

"Without it be a bottell?

"Another bottell I wyll go purvey,

"Left that drynk be scarce in the way,

"Or happily none to sell." STEVENS.

⁴ — if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him.] Certainly, he'll pierce him, i. e. Prince Henry will, who is just gone out to seek him. Besides, I'll pierce him, contradicts the whole turn and humour of the speech. WARBURTON.

I rather take the conceit to be this: To pierce a vessel is to tap it. Falstaff takes up his bottle which the Prince had tolled at his head, and being about to animate himself with a draught, cries: If Percy be alive, I'll pierce him, and so draws the cork. I do not propose this with much confidence. JOHNSON.

Ben Jonson has the same quibble in his New Inn, Act III:

"Sir Percy and I will pierce us a new hogthead."

in his, willingly, let him make a carbonado of me.³
 I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath;
 Give me life: which if I can save, so; if not,
 honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV.

Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the King, Prince HENRY, Prince JOHN, and WESTMORELAND.

K. HEN. I pr'ythee,
 Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much:⁴—
 Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

P. JOHN. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

P. HEN. I do beseech your majesty, make up,
 Left your retirement do amaze your friends.⁵

I believe Falstaff makes this boast that the Prince may hear it;
 and continues the rest of the speech in a lower accent, or when he is out of hearing. Shakspeare has the same play on words in Love's Labour's Lost, Act IV. sc. ii. Vol. VII. p. 265. n. 8.

STEEVENS.

Shakspeare was not aware that he here ridiculed the serious etymology of the Scottish historian: "Piercy a pistrando aculum Regis Scotorum, ut tabularum Boetius." Strenu. HOLT WHITE.
³ — — a carbonado of me.] A carbonado is a piece of meat cut cross-wise for the gridiron. JOHNSON.

So, in The Spanish Gypsies by Middleton and Rowley, 1633:

"Carbonado thou the old rogue my father. — —"

"While you lye into collops the rusty gammon his man."

STEEVENS.

⁴ — — thou bleed'st too much] History says, the Prince was wounded in the face by an arrow. STEEVENS.

⁵ — — amaze your friends.] i. e. throw them into confusion.

STEEVENS.

K. HEN. I will do so: —

My lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

WEST. Come, my lord, I will lead you to your tent.

P. HEN. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help:

And heaven forbid, a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this;

Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on,
And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

P. JOHN. We breathe too long:—Come, cousin
Westmoreland,

Our duty this way lies; for God's sake, come.

[Exeunt Prince JOHN and WESTMORELAND.]

P. HEN. By heaven, thou hast deceiv'd me, Lancaster,

I did not think thee lord of such a spirit:
Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John;
But now, I do respect thee as my soul.

K. HEN. I saw him hold lord Percy at the point,
With lustier maintenance than I did look for
Of such an ungrown warrior.⁶

P. HEN. O, this boy
Lends mettle to us all; [Exit,

⁶ *I saw him hold lord Percy at the point,
With lustier maintenance than I did look for &c.*] So, Holinshed,
p. 759: " — the castle of Richmond withstood his violence, and kept him at the sword's point without advantage, longer than his companions either thought or judged. STEEVENS.

Alarums. Enter DOUGLAS.

DOUG. Another king ! they grow like Hydra's heads :

I am the Douglas, fatal to all those
That wear those colours on them. — What art thou,
That counterfeit'st the person of a king ?

K. HEN. The king himself ; who, Douglas, grieves at heart,

So many of his shadows thou hast met,
And not the very king. I have two boys,
Seek Percy, and thyself, about the field :
But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee ; so defend thyself.

DOUG. I fear, thou art another counterfeit ;
And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king :
But mine, I am sure, thou art, whoe'er thou be,
And thus I win thee.

[They fight ; the King being in danger, enter Prince HENRY.

P. HEN. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like

Never to hold it up again ! the spirits
Of Shirley, ⁵ Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms :
It is the prince of Wales, that threatens thee ;
Who never promiseth, but he means to pay. ⁶ —

[They fight ; DOUGLAS flies.

⁵ Of Shirley, &c. } The old copies, redundantly,
Of valiant Shirley, &c. STEEVENS.

⁶ Who never promiseth, but he means to pay. We should certainly read:

Who never promiseth, but means to pay.

which agrees with what the Prince says in the fifth Act :

" And pay the debts I never promised." M. MASON,

Cheerly, my lord; How fares your grace? —
 Sir Nicholas Gawfey hath for succour sent,
 And lo hath Clifton; I'll to Clifton straight.

K. HEN. Stay, and breathe a while:
 Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion;[†]
 And shew'd, thou mak'lt some tender of my life,
 In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

P. HEN. O heaven! 'twere did me too much injury,
 That ever said, I hearken'd for your death.
 If it were so, I might have let alone
 The insulting hand of Douglas over you;
 Which would have been as speedy in your end,
 As all the poisonous potions in the world,
 And sav'd the treacherous labour of your son.

K. HEN. Make up to Clifton, I'll to Sir Nicholas
 Gawfey. [Exit King HENRY.]

Enter HOTSPUR.

HOT. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

P. HEN. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

HOT. My name is Harry Percy.

P. HEN. Why, then I see
 A very valiant rebel of the name.

[†] Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion;] i. e. thy lost reputation; for in that sense the word was then used. So, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Thierry and Theodoret:

"What opinion will the managing

"Of this affair bring to my wisdom?" my invention

"Tickles with approbation on't!"

Again, in The Gonerel, by Shirley, 1637:

"Patience! I mean you have the opinion of a valiant gentleman; one that dares fight and maintain your honour against odds."

REED.

I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:
Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere;
Nor can one England brook a double reign,
Of Harry Percy, and the prince of Wales.

HOT. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come
To end the one of us; And 'would to God,
Thy name in arms were now as great as mine!

P. HEN. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee;

And all the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.

HOT. I can no longer brook thy vanities.

[They fight.]

Enter FALSTAFF.

FAL. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal! — Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

Enter DOUGLAS; he fights with FALSTAFF, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit DOUGLAS.

HOTSPUR is wounded, and falls.

HOT. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth:

I better brook the loss of brittle life,

[O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth:] Shakspeare has chosen to make Hotspur fall by the hand of the Prince of Wales; but there is, I believe, no authority for the fact. Holinshed says, "The king slew that day with his own hand six and thirty persons of his enemies. The other [i. e. troops] of his party, encouraged by his doings, fought valiantly, and slew the Lord Percy, called Henry Hotspur." Speed says Percy was killed by an unknown band. MALONE.

Than those proud titles thou hast won of me ;
They wound my thoughts, worse than thy sword
my flesh : ———

But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool ;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop.³ O, I could prophecy,
But that the earthy and cold hand of death
Lies on my tongue:—No, Percy, thou art dust,
And food for ——— [Dies.

P. HEN. For worms, brave Percy : Fare thee well, great heart ! —

Ill-weav'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk !²
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound ;
But now, two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough:—This earth, that bears thee dead,⁴

² ——— those proud titles thou hast won of me ;

They wound my thoughts,——

But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool ;

And time,——

Must have a stop. } Hotspur in his last moments endeavours to console himself. The glory of the prince wounds his thoughts ; but thought, being dependent on life, must cease with it, and will soon be at an end. Life, on which thought depends, is itself of no great value, being the seat and sport of time ; of time, which with all its dominion over sublunary things, must itself at last be stopped. JOHNSON.

Hotspur alludes to the Fool in our ancient satires, or the representations commonly called Death's Dance, &c. The same allusion occurs in Measure for Measure, and Love's Labour's Lost.

STEVENS.

The same expression is to be found in our author's 106th Sonnet :

" Love's not Time's fool." MALONE.

³ Ill-weav'd ambition, &c.] A metaphor taken from cloth, which shrinks when it is ill-weav'd, when its texture is loose. JOHNSON.

⁴ A kingdom for it was too small a bound ; &c.]

" Carniobus confide bonis—jacet ecce Tibullus ;

" Vix manet e toto parva quod urna capis." Ovid.

JOHNSON.

⁴ ——— that bears thee dead,] The most authentick copy, the Bears not alive so stout a gentleman.

 If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
 I should not make so dear a show⁵ of zeal: —
 But let my favours hide thy mangled face;⁶
 And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself
 For doing these fair rites of tenderneſs.
 Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven!
 Thy ignomy⁷ sleep with thee in the grave,
 But not remember'd in thy epitaph! —
 [He ſees FALSTAFF on the ground.

What! old acquaintance! could not all this fleſh
 Keep in a little life; poor Jack, farewell!
 I could have better ſpar'd a better man.
 O, I ſhould have a heavy miſs of thee,
 If I were much in love with vanity.
 Death hath not ſtruck ſo fat a deer⁸ to-day,
 Though many dearer,⁹ in this bloody fray:—

quarto of 1598, and the folio, have—the dead. The true reading is found in a quarto of no authority or value, 1639; but it is here clearly right. MALONE.

⁵ —ſo dear a ſhow—] Thus the firſt and beſt quarto. All the ſubſequent copies have—ſo great, &c. MALONE.

⁶ But let my favours hide thy mangled face;] We ſhould read—favours, face, or countenance. He is ſloping down here to kiſs Hotſpur. WARBURTON.

He rather covers his face with a ſcarf, to hide the ghoulneſs of death. JOHNSON.

See p. 332, o. 5. MALONE.

⁷ —ignomy—] So the word ignomy was formerly written, Thus, in Titulus and Crefſida, Act V. ſc. iii:

“Hence brookeſt lacquey! ignomy and ſhame,” &c.

REXO.

Again, in Lord Cromwell, 1602:

“With ſcandalous ignomy and ſlanderoſ ſpeeches.”

See Vol. VI. p. 91, n. 4. MALONE.

⁸ —ſo fat a deer—] There is in theſe lines a very natural Embowell'd will I see thee by and by;

Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit,

FAL, [Rising slowly.] Embowell'd! if thou embowel me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me,* and eat me too, to-morrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie, I am no counterfeit: To die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is—discretion; in the which better part, I have saved my life. 'Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead: How if he should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid, he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure: yea, and I'll swear I kill'd him. Why may not he rise, as well as I?

mixture of the serious and ludicrous, produced by the view of Percy and Falstaff. I with all play on words had been forborne.

I find the same quibble in The Two Angry Women of Abington, 1599:

"Life is as dear in dear, as 'tis in men."

Again, in A Maidenhead well Lost, 1612, a comedy by Heywood:

"There's no dear so dear to him, but he will kill it."

STARVANS.

Fal is the reading of the first quarto 1598, the most authentic impression of this play, and of the folio. The other quartos have—few. MALONE.

So fat a dear, seems to be the better reading, for Turberville, in The Terms of the Ages of all Beasts of Venery and Chase, observes, "— You shall say by anie deare, a great deare, and not a jeyst deare, unless it be a rowe, which in the fifth year is called . . . rowe-bucke." TOLLET.

* — many dearer,] Many of greater value. JOHNSON.

* — to powder me,] To powder is to kill. JOHNSON.

D d 2

Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, firrah, [Stabbing him.] with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me.

[Takes HOTSPUR on his back.]

Re-enter Prince HENRY and Prince JOHN.

P. HEN. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thou flesh'd Thy maiden sword.

P. JOHN. But, soft! whom have we here?
Did you not tell me, this fat man was dead?

P. HEN. I did; I saw him dead, breatheless and bleeding
Upon the ground.⁸——

Art thou alive? or is it fantasy
That plays upon our eyesight? I pr'ythee, speak;
We will not trust our eyes, without our ears:—
Thou art not what thou seem'st.

FAL. No, that's certain; I am not a double man:⁹
but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack.
There is Percy: [Throwing the body down.] if your father will do me any honour, so; if no, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke; I can assure you.

P. HEN. Why, Percy I kill'd myself, and saw thee dead.

FAL. Didst thou?—Lord, lord, how this world is given to lying!—I grant you, I was down, and out of breath; and so was he; but we rose both at

⁸ Upon the ground.] Old copies—

On the ground.—— STEEVENS.

⁹ —— a double man:] That is, I am not Falstaff and Percy together, though having Percy on my back, I seem double.

JOHNSON.

an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believ'd, so; if not, let them, that should reward valour, bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: * if the man were alive, and would deny it, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. JOHN. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

P. HEN. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.——

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

(A retreat is sounded.)

The trumpet sounds retreat, the day is ours.
Come, brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what friends are living, who are dead.

(Exit Prince HENRY and Prince JOHN.)

FAL. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

(Exit, bearing off the body.)

*—— I gave him this wound in the thigh:] The very learned Lord Lyttelton observes, that Shakspeare has applied an action to Falstaff, which William of Malmesbury, tells us was really done by one of the Conqueror's knights to the body of King Harold. I do not however believe that Lord Lyttelton supposed Shakspeare to have read this old Monk. The story is told likewise by Matthew Paris and Matthew of Westminster; and by many of the English Chroniclers, Stowe, Speed, &c. &c. FARMER.

SCENE V.

Another Part of the Field.

The trumpets sound. Enter King HENRY, Prince HENRY, Prince JOHN, WESTMORLAND, and Others, with WORCESTER and VERNON, prisoners.

K. HEN. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.³—
 Ill-spirited Worcester! did we not send grace,
 Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?
 And would'st thou turn our offers contrary?
 Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust?
 Three knights upon our party slain to-day,
 A noble earl, and many a creature else,
 Had been alive this hour,
 If, like a christian, thou hadst truly borne
 Betwixt our armies true intelligence.

WOR. What I have done, my safety urg'd me to;
 And I embrace this fortune patiently,
 Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

K. HEN. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon too:

Other offenders we will pause upon.—

(Exit WORCESTER and VERNON, guarded.)
 How goes the field?

P. HEN. The noble Scot, lord Douglas, when he saw

The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,

³ Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke, Thomas Churchyard, in a catalogue of his own printed works, prefixed to his Challenge, 1593, informs us, that he had published "a booke called A rebuke to Rebellion [dedicated] to the good old Earle of Bedford."

The noble Percy slain, and all his men
 Upon the foot of fear,—fled with the rest;
 And, falling from a bill, he was so bruise'd,
 That the pursuers took him. At my tent
 The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace,
 I may dispose of him.

K. HEN. With all my heart.

P. HEN. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to
 you

This honourable bounty shall belong:
 Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
 Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free:
 His valour, shown upon our crests to-day,
 Hath taught us⁴ how to cherish such high deeds,
 Even in the bosom of our adversaries.⁵

K. HEN. Then this remains,—that we divide our power.—

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland, Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest
 speed,

To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scroop,
 Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:

Hath taught us —] This reading, which serves to exclude an inelegant repetition, [and might have been derived from the quarto 1598, corrected by our author,] is refused by Mr. Malone.
 See the subsequent note: and yet, are we authorized to reject the first word, merely because it is not found in the earliest copy?
 In a note on p. 401, Mr. Malone accepts a reading from a late quarto, which he acknowledges to be of no value. STEEVENS.

Hath shown us —] Thus the quarto, 1598. In that of 1599, shown was arbitrarily changed to taught, which consequently is the reading of the folio. The repetition is much in our author's manner. MALONE.

⁴ Here Mr. Pope inserts the following speech from the quartos:

"Lan. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,

"Which I shall give away immediately."

But Dr. Johnson judiciously supposes it to have been rejected by Shakspeare himself. STEEVENS.

Myself,—and you, son Harry,—will towards Wales,
 To fight with Glendower, and the earl of March.
 Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
 Meeting the check of such another day:
 And since this business so fair is done,
 Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exeunt.]

⁶ And since this business so fair is done, Fair for fairly. Either that word is here used as a dissyllable, or business as a trisyllable.

MALONE.

Business is undoubtedly the word employed as a trisyllable.

STEEVENS.

The following Observations arrived too late to be inserted in their proper place, and are therefore referred to the conclusion of Mr. Malone's note, p. 189.

Neither evidence nor argument has in my opinion been yet produced, sufficient to controvert the received opinion, that the character of Falstaff was originally represented under the name of Oldcastle. The contraction of the original name Old, left standing in the first edition, as the prolocutor of one of Falstaff's speeches, this address of "Old lad of the castle," the Epilogue to King Henry V. plainly understood, the tradition mentioned by Mr. Rowe, and the united testimony of contemporary or succeeding writers, not to insist on the opinion of the most eminent critics and commentators, seem irrefragable. It has been observed, that "if the verses be examined in which the name of Falstaff occurs, it will be found that Oldcastle could not have stood in those places;" and that "those only who are entirely unacquainted with our author's history and works, can suppose him to have undergone the labour of new-writing each verse." These verses, I believe, are in number seven; and why he, who wrote between thirty and forty plays with ease, cannot be reasonably supposed to have submitted to the drudgery of new-writing seven lines, to introduce an alteration commanded by his sovereign, is to me utterly incomprehensible. But what need after all, of new-writing? There was but a single syllable, in difference between the two names, to be supplied, which might surely be effected, in some places at least without an entirely new line. The verses in question are, at present, as follows :

1. " Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death ; "
2. " And asking every one for Sir John Falstaff ; "
3. " Give me my sword and cloak ; Falstaff good night ; "
4. " Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while ? " .
5. " Fare you well, Falstaff, I, in my condition ; "
6. " Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair ; "
7. " Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet ; "

And may be supposed to have stood originally thus :

1. " Away, good Ned, Oldcastle sweats to death ; "
2. " And asking every one for Sir John Oldcastle ; "
3. " Give me my sword and cloak, good night, Oldcastle ; "
4. " Now, Oldcastle, where've you been all this while ? " or,
" Oldcastle, where have you been all this while ? " .
5. " Fare you well, Oldcastle, I, in my condition ; "
6. " You must now speak Sir John Oldcastle fair ; "
7. " Go, carry Sir John Oldcastle to the Fleet ; " or,
" Carry Sir John Oldcastle to the Fleet. "

Now, it is remarkable, that, of these seven lines, the first actually requires the name of Oldcastle to perfect the metre, which is at present a foot deficient, and consequently affords a proof that it was originally written to suit that name and no other ; the second and fifth do not require the alteration of a single letter ; the third but a slight transposition ; and the fourth, sixth, and seventh, the addition at most of a single syllable. So that all this mighty labour, which no one acquainted with our author's history and works can suppose him to have undergone, consisted in the substitution of Falstaff for Oldcastle, the transposition of two words, and the addition of three syllables ! a prodigious and insurmountable fatigue to be sure ! which might have taken no less space than two long minutes ; and which, after all, he might probably and fairly commit to the players.

However the character of Sir John Oldcastle, in the original play, might be performed, he does not, from any passage now in it, appear to have been either a pamper'd glutton, or a coward ; and therefore it is a fair inference that all those extracts from early writers, in which Oldcastle is thus described, refer to our author's character so called, and not to the old play. If it be true that Queen Elizabeth, on seeing both or either of these plays of Henry IV. commanded Shakspeare to produce his fit knight in a different situation, she might at the same time, out of respect to the memory of Lord Cobham, have signified a desire that he would change his name ; which, being already acquainted with another cowardly knight of the same christian name, one Sir John Falstaffe, in the old play of Henry VI. (for both Hall and Holinshed call him rightly Falstolfe) he was able to do without having the trouble to invent or hunt after a new one; not perceiving or regarding the confusion which the transfer would naturally make between the two characters. However this may have been, there is every reason to believe that when these two plays came out of our author's hands, the name of Oldcastle supplied the place of Falstaffe. He continued Ned and Gadshill, and why should he abandon Oldcastle? a name and character to which the public was already familiarised, and whom an audience would indisputably be much more glad to see along with his old companions than a stranger; if indeed our author himself did not at the time he was writing these dramas, take the Sir John Oldcastle of the original play to be a real historical personage, as necessarily connected with his story as Hal or Hotspur. RITSON.

Mr. TOLLER's Opinion concerning the MORRIS DANCERS upon his Window.

THE celebration of May-day, which is represented upon my window of painted glass, is a very ancient custom, that has been observed by noble and royal personages, as well as by the vulgar. It is mentioned in Chaucer's Court of Love, that early on May-day "furth goth al the court, both moost and lest, to fetch the flouris fresh, and braunch, and blome." Historians record, that in the beginning of his reign, Henry the Eighth with his courtiers "rose on May-day very early to fetch May or green boughs, and they went with their bows and arrows shooting to the wood." Stowe's Survey of London informs us, that "every parish there, or two or three parishes joining together, had their Mayings; and did fetch in May poles, with diverse warlike shews, with good archers, Morris Dancers, and other devices for pastime all the day long." Shakespeare *says it was "impossible to make the people sleep on May morning; and that they rose early to observe the rite of May." The court of king James the First, and the populace, long preserved the observance of the day, as Spelman's Glossary remarks under the word, Matuna.

* King Henry VIII. Act V. sc. iii. and Midsummer Night's Dream. Act IV. sc. i.

Better judges may decide, that the institution of this festivity originated from the Roman Floralia, or from the Celtic la Beltine, while I conceive it derived to us from our Gothic ancestors. Olaus Magnus de Gentibus septentrionalibus, Lib. XV. c. viii. lays "that after a then long winter from the beginning of October to the end of April, the northern nations have a custom to welcome the returning splendor of the sun with dancing, and mutually to feast each other, rejoicing that a better season for fishing and hunting was approached." In honour of May-day the Goths and southern Swedes had a mock battle between summer and winter, which ceremony is retained in the Isle of Man, where the Danes and Norwegians had been for a long time masters. It appears from Holmsted's Chronicle, Vol. III. p. 314, or in the year 1306, that, before that time, in country towns the young folks chose a summer king and queen for sport to dance about Maypoles. There can be no doubt but their majesties had proper attendants, or such as would best divert the spectators; and we may presume, that some of the characters varied, as fashions and customs altered. About half a century afterwards, a great addition seems to have been made to the diversion by the introduction of the Morris or Moorish dance into it, which, as Mr. Peck, in his Memoirs of Milton, with great probability conjectures, was first brought into England in the time of Edward III. when John of Gaunt returned from Spain, where he had been to assist Peter, King of Castile, against Henry the Bastard. "This dance," says Mr. Peck, was usually performed abroad by an equal number of young men, who danced in their shirts with ribbands and little bells about their legs. But here in England they have always an odd person besides, being a boy * dressed in a girl's habit, whom they call Maid Marian, an old favourite character in the sport." "Thus," as he observes in the words of Shakspeare, † "they made more matter for a May morning: having as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, a Morris for May-day."

We are authorized by the poets, Ben Jonson and Drayton, to call some of the representations on my window Morris Dancers, though I am uncertain whether it exhibits one Moorish personage; as none of them have black or tawny faces, nor do they brandish swords or staves in their hands, ‡ nor are they in their shirts

* It is evident from several authors, that Maid Marian's part was frequently performed by a young woman, and often by one, as I think, of untainted reputation. On Maid Marian's deportment is decent and graceful.

† Twelfth Night, Act. III. sc. iv. All's well that ends well, Act. II. sc. ii.

‡ In the Morrice the dancers held swords in their hands with the points up and, says Dr. Johnson's note in Antony and Cleopatra, Act. III. sc. ix. The Goths did the same in their military dance, says Olaus Magnus, Lib. XV. ch. xxiii. Haydocke's translation of Lomazzo on adorned with ribbons. We find in Olav Magnus, that the northern nations danced with brafs bells about their knees, and such we have upon several of these figures, who may perhaps be the original English performers in a May-game before the introduction of the real Morris dance. However this may be, the window exhibits a favourite diversion of our ancestors in all its principal parts. I shall endeavour to explain some of the characters, and in compliment to the lady I will begin the description with the front rank, in which she is stationed. I am fortunate enough to have Mr. Steevens think with me, that figure 1. may be designed for the Bavian fool, or the fool with the flabbering bib, as Bavon, in Coigrave's French Dictionary, means a bib for a flabbering child, and this figure has such a bib, and a childish simplicity in his countenance. Mr. Steevens refers to a passage in Beaumont and Fletcher's play of The Two Noble Kinsmen, by which it appears that the Bavian in the Morris dance was a tumbler, and mistooked the barking of a dog. I apprehend that several of the Morris dancers on my window tumbled occasionally, and exerted the chief feat of their activity, when they were aside the May-pole; and I apprehend that jigs, hornpipes, and the lay, were their chief dances.

It will certainly be tedious to describe the colours of the dresses, but the task is attempted upon an intimation, that it might not be altogether unacceptable. The Bavian's cap is red, faced with yellow, his bib yellow, his doublet blue, his hose red, and his shoes black.

Figure 2. is the celebrated Maid Marian, who, as queen of May, has a golden gown on her head, and in her left hand a flower, as the emblem of summer. The flower seems designed for a red pink, but the pointals are omitted by the engraver, who copied from a drawing with the like mistake. Olav Magnus mentions the artificial raising of flowers for the celebration of May-day; and the supposition of the like practice * here will account for the queen of May having in her hand any particular flower before the season of its natural production in this climate. Her vesture was once fashionable in the highest degree. It was anciently the custom for maiden ladies to wear their hair † dishevelled at their coronations, Peletius, 1598, Book II. p. 54, says: "There are other actions of dancing used, as of those who are represented with weapons in their hands going round in a ring, rapiering skilfully, skaling their weapons after the manner of the Morris, with divers actions of meeting," &c.

"Others hanging Morris bells upon their sockets."

* Markland's translation of Herebatch's Hutbundry, 1631, observes, "that gillflowers, set in pots and carried into vaults or cellars have flowered all the winter long, through the warmth of the place."

† Letind's Collectanea, 1710, Vol. IV. p. 219, 203, Vol. V. p. 337, and Unfinished, Vol. III. p. 501, 931; and see Capell in Spelman's Glossary.

their nuptials, and perhaps on all splendid solemnities. Margaret, the eldest daughter of Henry VII. was married to James, King of Scotland, with the crown upon her head: her hair hanging down. Betwixt the crown and the hair was a very rich coat hanging down behind the whole length of the body. — This single example sufficiently explains the diets of Marian's head. Her coif is purple, her farcoat blue, her cuffs white, the skirts of her robe yellow, the sleeves of a carnation colour, and her stomachs red with a yellow lace in cross bars. In Shakspeare's play of Henry VIII. Anne Bullen at her coronation is in her hair, or as Holinshed says, "her hair hanged down," but on her head she had a coif with a euclet about it full of rich stones.

Figure 3. is a friar in the full clerical tonsure, with the chaplet of white and red beads in his right hand; and, expressive of his professed humility, his eyes are cast upon the ground. His corded girdle, and his russet habit, denote him to be of the Franciscan order, or one of the grey friars, as they were commonly called from the colour of their apparel, which was a russet or a brown russet, as Holinshed, 1586, Vol. III. p. 789, observes. The mixture of colours in his habit may be resembled to a grey cloud, faintly tinged with red by the beams of the rising sun, and streaked with black; and such perhaps was Shakspeare's Aurora, or "the morn in russet mantle clad." Hamlet, Act I. sc. 1. The friar's stockings are red, his red girdle is ornamented with a golden tress, and with a golden tassel. At his girdle hangs a wallet for the reception of provision, the only revenue of the mendicant orders of religious, who were named Walletters or budget-bearers. It was customary* in former times for the priest and people in procession to go to some adjoining wood on May-day morning, and return in a sort of triumph with a May-pole, boughs, flowers, garlands, and such like tokens of the spring; and as the grey friars were held in very great esteem, perhaps on this occasion their attendance was frequently requested. Most of Shakspeare's friars are Franciscans. Mr. Steevens ingeniously suggests, that as Martin was the name of Robin Hood's beloved mistress, and as she was the queen of May, the Martin friar was designed for Friar Tuck, chaplain to Robin Hood, king of May, as Robin Hood is styled in Sir

* See Mait Inductio in Cowell's Law Dictionary. When the parish priests were inhibited by the diocesan to assist in the May games, the Franciscans might give attendance, as being exempted from episcopal jurisdiction.

Splendid girdles appear to have been a great article of monastic finery. Wykeham, in his Visitatio Notabilis, prohibits the Canons of Selborne any longer wearing fitten girdles ornamented with gold or silver: "Zonive feneis aut vel argenti ornatum habebantibus." See Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne, p. 371. and Appendix, p. 459. HOLT WHITE.

David Dalrymple's extracts from the book of the Universal Kirk, in the year 1576.

Figure 4. has been taken to be Marian's gentleman-usher, Mr. Stevens confides him as Marian's paramour, who in delicacy appears uncovered before her; and as it was a custom for betrothed persons to wear some mark for a token of their mutual engagement, he thinks that the cross-shaped flower on the head of this figure, and the flower in Marian's hand, denote their espousals or contract. Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, April, specifies the flowers worn of paramours to be the pink, the purple columbine, gilliflowers, carnations, and lops in wine. I suppose the flower in Marian's hand to be a pink, and this to be a stock-gilliflower, or the H. for's, dam's violet, or queen's gilliflower; but perhaps it may be designed for an ornamental ribbon. An eminent botanist apprehends the flower upon the man's head to be an Epimedium. Many particulars of this figure resemble Absolon, the parish clerk in Chaucer's Miller's Tale, such as his curled and golden hair, his kirtle of watch t, his red hose, and Paul's windows corvin on his shoon, that is, his shoon pinked and cut into holes, like the windows of St. Paul's ancient church. My window plainly exhibits upon his right thigh a yellow scrip or pouch, in which he might, as treasurer to the company, put the collected pence, which he might receive, though the cordeller must, by the rules of his order, carry no money about him. If this figure should not be allowed to be a parish clerk, I incline to call him Hocus Pocus, or some juggler attendant upon the master of the hobby-horse, as "faire de tous de (jouer de la) gibecière," in Boyer's French Dictionary, signifies to play tricks by virtue of Hocus Pocus. His red stomacher has a yellow lace, and his shoes are yellow. Ben Jonson mentions "Hokus Pokos in a juggler's jerkin," which Skinner derives from kirtlekin; that is, a short kirtle, and such seems to be the coat of this figure.

Figure 5. is the famous hobby-horse, who was often forgotten or disused in the Morris dance, even after Mard Marian, the friar, and the fool, were continued in it, as is intimated in Ben Jonson's masque of The Merry-morphosed Gypsies, and in his Entertainment of the Queen and Prince at Althorpe. * Our hobby is a spirited horse

* Vol. VI. p. 93. of Whittier's edition, 1756 :

"Clo. They should be Morris dancers by their gingle, but they have no napkins.

"Cec. No, nor a hobby-horse.

"Clo. Oh, he's afra forgotten, that's no rule; but there is no Maid Marian nor friar amongst them, which is the surer mark."

Vol. V. p. 211 :

"But see, the hobby-horse is forgot."

"Fool, it must be your tot

"To supply his want with fares,

"And some other hudson graces."

of pasteboard, in which the master dances,* and displays tricks of legerdemain, such as the threading of the needle, the manning of the whigh-bie, and the daggers in the nose, &c. as Ben Jonson, edn. 1756, Vol. I. p. 171, acquaints us, and thereby explains the swords in the man's cheeks. What is stuck in the horse's mouth I apprehend to be a ladle ornamented with a ribbon. His use was to receive the spectators' pecuniary donations. The crimson foot cloth fringed with gold, the golden bit, the purple bridle with a golden tassel, and studded with gold; the man's purple mantle with a golden border, which is fancied with purple, his golden crown, purple cap with a red feather, and with a golden knob, induce me to think him to be the king of May; though he now appears as a juggler and a buffoon. We are to recollect the simplicity of ancient times, which knew not polite literature, and delighted in jesters, tumblers, jugglers, and pantomimes. The emperor Lewis the Debonair not only sent for such actors upon great festivals, but out of complaisance to the people was obliged to assist at their plays, though he was averse to publick shews. Queen Elizabeth was entertained at Kenilworth with Italian tumblers, Morris dancers, &c. The colour of the hobby-horse is a reddish white, like the beautiful blossom of the peach-tree. The man's coat or doublet is the only one upon the window that has buttons upon it, and the right side of it is yellow, and the left red. Such a particoloured jacket,† and hose in the like manner, were occasionally fashionable from Chaucer's days to Ben Jonson's, who, in Epigram 73, speaks of a "partie-per-pate picture, one half drawn in solemn Cyprus, the other cobweb lawn."

Figure 6. seems to be a clown, peasant, or yeoman, by his brown visage, parted hair, and robust limbs. † In Beaumont and Fletcher's play of The Two Noble Kinsmen, a clown is placed next to the Bavarian fool in the Morris dance; and this figure is next to him on the file, or in the downward line. His bonnet is red, faced with yellow, his jacket red, his sleeves yellow, striped across or rayed with red, the upper part of his hose is like the sleeves, and the lower part is a coarse deep purple, his shoes red.

Figure 7, by the superior neatness of his dress, may be a franklin or a gentleman of fortune. His hair is curled, his bonnet purple,

* Dr. Plot's History of Staffordshire, p. 434, mentions a dance by a hobby horse and six others.

† Holinshed, 1586, Vol. III. p. 326, 805, 812, 844, 953. Whalley's edition of Ben Jonson, Vol. VI. p. 248. Stowe's Survey of London, 1720, Book V. p. 164, 166. Urry's Chaucer, p. 198.

† So, in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, the yeoman is thus described; "A noot hede had he, with a brown visage."

Again, in The Widow's Tears, by Chapman, 1612: "— your not-headed country gentleman," his doublet red with gathered sleeves, and his yellow stomacher is laced with red. His hose red, striped acrols or rayed with a whitish brown, and spotted brown. His cod-piece is yellow, and so are his shoes.

Figure 8. the May-pole, is painted yellow and black in spiral lines. Spelman's Glossary mentions the custom of erecting a tall May-pole painted with various colours. Shakspere, in the play of A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act. III, sc. ii. speaks of a painted May-pole. Upon our pole are displayed St. George's red cross, or the banner of England, and a white pennon or streamer emblazoned with a red cross terminating like the blade of a sword, but the delineation thereof is much faded. It is plain however from an inspection of the window, that the upright line of the cross, which is dissimiled in the engraving, should be continuous.* Keyser, in p. 78, of his Northern and Celtic Antiquities, gives us perhaps the original of May-poles; and that the French used to erect them appears also from Mezeray's History of their King Henry IV. and from a passage in Stowe's Chronicle in the year 1560. Mr. Theobald and Dr. Warton acquaint us that the May-games, and particularly some of the characters in them, became execrable to the puritanical humour of former times. By an ordinance of the Rump Parliament † in April, 1644, all May-poles were taken down and removed by the constables and church-wardens, &c. After the Restoration they were permitted to be erected again. I apprehend they are now generally unregarded and unrequented, but we still on May-day adorn our doors in the country with flowers and the boughs of huch, which tree was especially honoured on the same festival by our Gothic ancestors.

To prove figure 9. to be Tom the Piper, Mr. Stevens has very happily quoted these lines from Dryden's third Eclogue:

"Myself above Tom Piper to advance,
"Who so bestirs him in the Morris dance
"For penny wage."

His tabour, tabour-stick, and pipe, attest his profession; the feather in his cap, his sword, and silver-enclosed shield, may de-

† St. James was the apostle and patron of Spain, and the knights of his order were the most honourable there; and the ensign that they wore, was white, charged with a red cross in the form of a sword. The pennon or streamer upon the May-pole seems to contain such a cross. If this conjecture be admitted, we have the banner of England and the ensign of Spain upon the May-pole; and perhaps from this circumstance we may infer that the guild was painted during the marriage of King Henry VIII. and Katharine of Spain. For an account of the ensign of the knights of St. James, see Ashmole's History of the Order of the Garter, and Mariana's History of Spain.

† This should have been called the Long parliament. The Rump Parliament was in Oliver's time. RICH.

note him to be a squire minstrel, or a minstrel of the superior order. Chaucer, 1721, p. 181, says: "Minstrels used a red hat." Turn Piper's bonnet is red, faced or turned up with yellow, his doublet blue, the sleeves blue, turned up with yellow, something like red muffs at his wrists, over his doublet is a red garment, like a short cloak with arm-holes, and with a yellow cape, his hose red, and garnished across and perpendicularly on the thighs, with a narrow yellow lace. This ornamental trimming seems to be called gimp-thigh'd in Grey's edition of Butler's Hudibras; and something almost similar occurs in Love's Labour's Lost, Act IV. sc. ii. where the poet mentions, "Rhimes are guards on wanton Cupid's hose." His shoes are brown.

Figures 10. and 11. have been thought to be Flemings or Spaniards, and the latter a Morisco. The bonnet of figure 10. is red, turned up with blue, his jacket red with red sleeves down the arms, his stomacher white with a red lace, his hose yellow, striped across or rayed with blue, and spotted blue, the under part of his hose blue, his shoes are pinked, and they are of a light colour. I am at a loss to name the pennant-like slips waving from his shoulders, but I will venture to call them side-sleeves or long sleeves, slit into two or three parts. The poet Hoccleve or Occleve, about the reign of Richard the Second, or of Henry the Fourth, mentions side-sleeves of pennylefs grooms, which swept the ground; and do not the two following quotations infer the use or fashion of two pair of sleeves upon one gown or doublet? It is asked in the appendix to Bulwer's Artificial Changeing: "What use is there of any other than arming sleeves, which answer the proportion of the arm?" In Much Ado about Nothing, Act III. sc. iv. a lady's gown is described with down-sleeves, and side-sleeves, that is, as I conceive it, with sleeves down the arms, and with another pair of sleeves, slit open before from the shoulder to the bottom or almost to the bottom, and by this means unsustained by the arms and hanging down by her sides to the ground or as low as her gown. If such sleeves were slit downwards into four parts, they would be quartered; and Holinshed says: "that at a royal mummery, Henry VIII. and fifteen others appeared in Almain jackets, with long quartered sleeves;" and I consider the bipartite or tripartite sleeves of figures 10. and 11. as only a small variation of that fashion. Mr. Steevens thinks the winged sleeves of figures 10. and 11. are alluded to in Beaumont and Fletcher in The Pilgrim:

"—— That fairy rogue that haunted me

"He has sleeves like dragon's wings."

And he thinks that from these perhaps the fluttering streamers of the present Morris dancers in Sussex may be derived. Markham's Art of Angling, 1635, orders the angler's apparel to be "without hanging sleeves, waving loose, like sails."

Figure 11. has upon his head a silver coronet, a purple cap with a red feather, and with a golden knop. In my opinion he personates a nobleman, for I incline to think that various ranks of life were meant to be represented upon my window. He has a post of honour, or, "a station in the valued file,"* which here seems to be the middle row, and which according to my conjecture comprehends the queen, the king, the May-pole, and the nobleman. The golden crown upon the head of the master of the bobby-horse, denotes pre-eminence of rank over figure 11, not only by the greater value of the metal, † but by the superior number of points raised upon it. The shoes are blackish, the hose red, striped across or rayed with brown or with a darker red, his codpiece yellow, his doublet yellow, with yellow lute sleeves, and red arming sleeves, or down-sleeves. The form of his doublet is remarkable. There is great variety in the dresses and attitudes of the Morris dancers on the window, but an ocular observation will give a more accurate idea of this and of other particulars than a verbal description.

Figure 12. is the counterfeit fool, that was kept in the royal palace, and in all great houses, to make sport for the family. He appears with all the badges of his office; the bauble in his hand, and a cockcomb hood with asses ears on his head. The top of the hood rises into the form of a cock's neck and head, with a bell at the latter; and Minsheu's Dictionary, 1627, under the word cock's comb, observes, that "natural idiots and fools have (accustomed) and still do accustom themselves to wear in their cappes cocke's feathers or a hat with a necke and a head of a cocke on the top, and a bell thereon," &c. His hood is blue, guarded or edged with yellow at its scalloped bottom, his doublet is red, striped across or rayed with a deeper red, and edged with yellow, his girdle yellow, his left side hose yellow, with a red shoe, and his right side hose blue, soled with red leather. Stowe's Chronicle, 1614, p. 899, mentions a pair of cloth-sockings soled with white leather called "cushambles," that is, "Chaussees semelles de cuir," as Mr. Anstus, on the Knighthood of the Bath, observes. The fool's bauble and the carved head with asses ears upon it are all yellow. There is in Olaus Magnus, 1555, p. 524, a delineation of a fool, or jester, with several bells upon his habit, with a bauble in his hand, and he has on his head a hood with asses ears, a feather, and the resemblance of the comb of a cock. Such jesters seem to have been formerly much esteemed by the northern nations,

* The right hand file is the first in dignity and account, even in degree of value, according to Count Mansfield's Discussions of War, 1624.

† The ancient kings of France wore gilded helucis, the dukes and counts wore silvered ones. See Selden's Titles of Honour for the raised points of Coronets.

especially in the court of Denmark; and perhaps our ancient joculator regis might mean such a person.

A gentleman of the highest class in historical literature, apprehends, that the representation upon my window is that of a Morris dance procession about a May-pole; and he inclines to think, yet with many doubts of its propriety in a modern painting, that the personages in it rank in the bouffrophedon form. By this arrangement (says he) the piece seems to form a regular whole, and the train is begun and ended by a fool in the following manner: Figure 12. is the well-known fool. Figure 11. is a Morisco, and figure 10. a Spaniard, persons peculiarly pertinent to the Morris dance; and he remarks that the Spaniard obviously forms a sort of middle term betwixt the Moorish and the English characters, having the great fantastical sleeve of the one, and the laced stomacher of the other. Figure 9. is Tom the Piper. Figure 8. the May-pole. Then follow the English characters, representing as he apprehends, the five great ranks of civil life. Figure 7. is the franklin, or private gentleman. Figure 6. is a plain churl or villane. He takes figure 5. the man within the hobby-horse, to be perhaps a Moorish king, and from many circumstances of superior grandeur plainly pointed out as the greatest personage of the piece, the monarch of the May, and the intended comfort of our English Maid Marian. Figure 4. is a nobleman. Figure 3. the friar, the representative of all the clergy. Figure 2. is Maid Marian, queen of May. Figure 1. the lesser fool closes the rear.

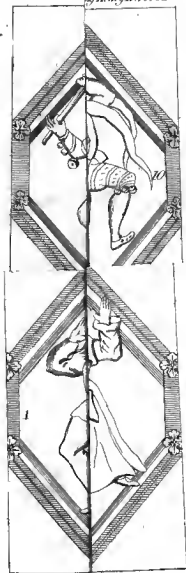

My description commences where this concludes, or I have reverted this gentleman's arrangement, by which in either way the train begins and ends with a fool; but I will not assert that such a disposition was designedly observed by the painter.

With regard to the antiquity of the painted glass there is no memorial or traditional account transmitted to us; nor is there any date in the room but this, 1621, which is over a door, and which indicates in my opinion the year of building the house. The book of Sports or lawfull Recreations upon Sunday after Evening-prayers, and upon Holy-days, published by King James in 1618, allowed May-games, Morris dances, and the letting up of May-poles; and, as Ben Jonson's Masque of The Metamorphosed Gypsies, intimates, that Maid Marian, and the friar, together with the often forgotten hobby-horse, were sometimes continued in the Morris dance as late as the year 1621, I once thought that the glass might be stained about that time; but my present objections to this are the following ones. It seems from the prologue to the play of King Henry VIII. that Shakspeare's fools should be dressed "in a long motley coat guarded with yellow;" but the fool upon my window is not so habited; and he has upon his head a hood, which I apprehend might be the coverture of the fool's head before the days of Shakspeare, when it was a cap with a comb like a cock's, as both Dr. Warburton and Dr. Johnson assert, and they seem justified in doing so from King Lear's fool giving Kent his cap, and calling it his cockeomb. I am uncertain, whether any judgement can be formed from the manner of spelling the inscribed inscription upon the May-pole, upon which is displayed the old banner of England, and not the union flag of Great Britain, or St. George's red cross and St. Andrew's white cross joined together, which was ordered by King James in 1606, as Stowe's Chronicle certifies. Only one of the doublets has buttons, which I conceive were common in Queen Elizabeth's reign; nor have any of the figures ruffs, which fashion commenced in the latter days of Henry VIII. and from their want of beards also I am inclined to suppose they were delineated before the year 1535, when "King Henry VIII. commanded all about his court to poll their heads, and caused his own to be polled, and his beard to be notted, and no more shaven." Probably the glasse was painted in his youthful days, when he delighted in May-games, unless it may be judged to be of much higher antiquity by almost two centuries.

Such are my conjectures upon a subject of so much obscurity; but it is high time to resign it to one more conversant with the history of our ancient dresses. TOLLET.

THE END OF THE TWELFTH VOLUME.

100
100 100 100

1003396

Compl.

